distress and in need of immediate relief,[42] although ordinarily he may be capable of self-support.[43] The fact that such person is able but unwilling to provide for himself by his labor is immaterial as affecting the duty of the authorities to assist him.[44] So the fact that he has some property will not affect his right to relief if the property is inaccessible or otherwise unavailable, and he is without credit or friends,[45] the question of his ability to pay for his support arising only as between the town providing support and the town of his legal settlement, after such support is furnished.[46] On the other hand a person may have no property, and yet, if he is supported by relatives or friends, not be in need of immediate relief within the meaning of the statute.[47] A statute providing for the relief of indigent residents in the county does not include a transient.[48]

[§ 7] B. Powers and Duties of Public Authorities—1. In General. At common law the public authorities are not liable for the support of paupers. Such liability rests entirely on statute.[49] The legislature has the power to impose upon the state,[50] and upon counties, towns, and municipalities,[51] the burden of the relief and support of paupers, and may likewise impose such burden upon individuals.[52] Statutes enacted for this purpose are therefore valid,[53] unless they violate some particular provision of the constitution.[54]

Construction of constitutional provisions. Constitutional provisions authorizing aid to paupers must be given a broad construction consistently with their benevolent purpose.[55]

[§ 8] 2. Construction, Operation, and Repeal of Statutes.[56] The general rules as to construction and operation of statutes[57] ordinarily apply to pauper laws.[58] To render a county or municipality liable, the case must come fairly within the terms of the

[a] Statutes construed in pari materia.—Statutes providing for means statute,[59] and a statute should not be extended by implication beyond what is necessary to accomplish its purpose.[60] In some jurisdictions it is held that statutes providing for the maintenance of paupers, being enacted in the interests of humanity, must be liberally construed to effectuate the benevolent policy of the legislature.[61]

Mandatory or directory provisions. The general rules for determining whether a statute is mandatory or directory[62] apply to statutes providing for the relief or support of the poor.[63] Where authority given to municipal corporations to adopt by-laws for the relief of the poor is in terms merely permissive, the adoption of such by-laws is discretionary with the municipalities.[64] But where a statute expressly makes it the duty of local authorities to provide for indigent persons, such provision is mandatory and must be strictly complied with.[65]

Retroactive operation of statutes. Such statutes, like constitutional provisions, always operate prospectively, and not retroactively, unless the words used or the objects to be accomplished indicate that a retroactive operation was intended.[66]

Repeal of statutes. The rule that repeals by implication are not favored[67] applies to pauper statutes,[68] and an intent to repeal such statutes must be clearly expressed, or necessarily implied, to effect a repeal.[69]

[d] Pension for blind.—(1) In view of § 2 denying a pension except upon "scientific vision test," the legislature, under Acts (1923) p 303, intended to give "light perception" a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, requiring expert determination according to known methods, and a certain definite, ascertainable condition in applicant, which precludes speculation, philosophical abstractions, and judicial discretion as to whether an individual is deserving, and an applicant able to see the direction of the motion of a hand at a distance of one foot with the left eye, and able to count the fingers of one hand is not entitled to a pension. Shelley v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, 309 Mo. 612, 274 SW 688. (2) Evidence that applicant for a pension as a blind person could perceive large letters on a chart, could distinguish between ordinary daylight and darkness, could see the direction of the motion of a hand or foot, and could count the fingers at a distance of one foot from the eye, shows a vision "greater than light perception," and renders applicant ineligible, under L. (1923) p 303 § 2, for a pension as a blind person. Gwaltney v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, (Mo.) 14 SW (2d) 988. (3) The allowance to blind persons, under Code (1924) § 5379, is not a "pension," but is in the nature of relief for the poor. In re Hugus, 203 Iowa 607, 213 NW 239.

[b] Relief of the blind.—(1) In Illinois an act in force July 1, 1908, empowering county authorities to relieve the blind, was held to make the granting of relief in a particular case discretionary with the board of supervisors. Peo. v. De Witt County, 161 Ill. A. 529. (2) In Kentucky it has been held that Act March 28, 1924 (L. [1924] c 18), providing that each county may contribute a sum not to exceed a specified maximum amount to each needy blind adult in the county, does not require the fiscal court to make provision for needy blind persons, but leaves the matter of provision for the blind to the discretion of the fiscal court, which may refuse to take any action under the statute. II. POOR LAW DISTRICTS AND OFFICERS

[§ 9] A. Creation, Alteration, Powers, and Liabilities of Districts. Upon the enactment of a statute creating poor law districts, and having for its object the establishment of a general system for the relief of the poor in a designated county, or throughout the state, local statutes, repugnant thereto, providing for the maintenance of the poor in a county, town, or borough, are thereby repealed, and the management and control of the poor of such borough is vested exclusively in the boards and officers designated by the later act,[70] unless expressly, or by clear implication, exempted from repeal.[71]

Alteration and dissolution of districts. The power to dissolve a poor law district,[72] and the mode and effect of altering such districts, or municipal subdivisions forming a part thereof,[73] is a matter of statutory construction.

Powers of district. The powers of a poor law district are those only which are written into its charter, either in express words or by necessary implication, so that without the exercise of the power it would be impossible for the district fairly to exercise other powers expressly conferred.[74]

Liabilities of district.[75] A poor law district or the township of Germantown, was superseded by Act June 20, 1839 [P. L. p 337], "for the better regulation and employment of the poor of the township of Germantown," as the latter act provides a complete system for the election of managers and care of the poor in that district).

St. (1903) c 27 § 11, declaring that towns shall relieve persons, when, because of poverty, they need relief, is absolute in terms and not repealed expressly or by necessary implication by c 18, authorizing the board of health to furnish medical treatment and care for persons who cannot otherwise be provided for. Hutchinson v. Carthage, 105 Me. 134, 73 A 825. (3) Act June 13, 1836 § 6, requiring an order for relief to be obtained from, and approved by, two magistrates, is not repealed by the act of May 13, 1879, which provides for relief without an order in poor districts where directors of the poor are appointed by the court of quarter sessions. Delaware Tp. v. Zerbe Tp., 3 Pa. Co. 643. (4) Payments for indigent tubercular patients in county hospitals for the care and treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis are governed by Act March 28, 1912 (P. L. p 340), providing for the establishment of county hospitals for the care and treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis, and such act was not repealed by L. (1918) c 147 (P. L. p 343). L. p 78], for which boundaries are the same as that of the county, is a separate quasi-municipal corporation).

[a] Particular statutes construed.—(1) By Spec. L. (1881) Extra Sess. c 221, each township in Le Sueur County was required to support its own poor, and the villages of such county remained a part of the township in which they were situated, for the purpose of supporting the poor. By Spec. L. (1885) c 71, this duty devolved "upon the several town boards, boroughs and village councils," and it was held that each village or borough thus became a separate district, liable for the support of its own poor. Cordova v. Le Sueur Center, 74 Minn. 515, 516, 77 NW 290, 430. (2) Act June 4, 1879 (P. L. p 78), being an act to create poor districts, and to authorize the erection of buildings for the relief of the poor, was intended to establish a general system for the relief of the poor without the state, and repealed local acts of March 21, 1865 (P. L. p 501), April 11, 1866 (P. L. p 608), and April 10, 1873 (P. Peo. v. St. Lawrence County, 103 N. Y. 541, 9 NE 311.

72. Local Govt. Bd. v. South Stoneham Union, [1909] A. C. 57.

[a] Power of local government board.—The local government board may, by virtue of Divided Parishes Act (1876) § 11, which authorizes the board to dissolve "any Union whether formed under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, or otherwise," dissolve a union formed under a local act of parliament. Local Govt. Bd. v. South Stoneham Union, [1909] A. C. 57, 59.

73. See cases infra this note.

[a] Consent of guardians to union of parishes.—Poor Law Amendment Act (1844) § 64 which, in the case of a parish of more than twenty thousand inhabitants, requires, for the union of such parish with any other parish, "the consent in writing of two-thirds at least" of the guardians of such parish, is confined to the case of a single parish, and does not apply to a union of parishes. Local Govt. Bd. v. South Stoneham Union, [1909] A. C. 57.

[b] Adjustment of rights and liabilities.—(1) Birmingham Union v. Tamworth Union, [1916] W. N. 324. (2) A portion of a township having been detached from one poor law union and included in another by an order made in pursuance of the Local Governments Acts of 1888 and 1894, the union from which the portion was taken claimed an adjustment of property and liabilities under Local Govt. Act (1894) § 68 as between their union and the union to which the transfer was made; an adjustment was rightly claimed as between the two unions, and not as between the union from which the area was taken and the transferred area, and any matter bearing upon the question whether and to what extent the union from which the area was taken had been financially damnified by the transfer would be properly taken into consideration in the adjustment. Matter of Rochdale Union, [1899] 1 Q. B. 540. (3) Where a person is separated from a union under Poor Law Amendment Act (1834) § 32, the annual sums granted by the county council to the union, under Local Govt. Act (1888) § 24 subs 1 d, § 26 subs 2, are property within the meaning of the words "other property held or enjoyed by such union" in Act (1834) § 32, and in case the parties do not agree under Dissolved Boards of Management and Guardians Act of 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c 2) § 11, upon the manner of the valuation of these payments, it is the duty of the local government board, upon the true construction of Act (1834) § 32, to ascertain the proportionate value of these payments to every parish of the union according to their existing capital value at the time of the alteration, and upon the basis of that value to fix once for all an amount to be received or paid or secured to be paid by every parish affected by the alteration. Reg. v. Local Govt. Bd., [1901] 1 K. B. 210.

[c] Transfer of portion of parish from one union to another.—Where, by an order of a county council made pursuant to Local Govt. Act (1888) § 57, and confirmed by the local government board, a portion of a common-law parish wholly within one poor law union in the county is transferred to a common-law parish within another union in the same county, and the whole area of that parish as extended is included in the rural district to which the transferred portion belonged, but no order has been made altering the boundaries of the two unions, the parish to which the portion was transferred still retains its identity and, as a whole, is within the union in which it was formerly included, notwithstanding its area has been extended. The added portion consequently is within the same union. Bootle v. Whitehaven, [1903] 2 Ch. 142. To same effect West Ham Union Guardians of Poor v. London County Council, [1902] 1 K. B. 562.

Settlement of pauper as affected by annexation, consolidation, division, and incorporation of towns see infra §§ 96–99.

74. Taylor v. Middle Coal Field Poor Dist., 50 Pa. Super. 317.

[a] Rule applied.—The middle coal field poor district, embracing portions of the counties of Carbon and Luzerne, and incorporated by the special Act of March 25, 1862 (P. L. p 178), with powers designated by reference to Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. p 294), and its supplement of April 3, 1860 (P. L. p 619), has no power to enter into a contract, without the approval of the courts of Carbon County, to pay an architect two per cent on a very large sum of money for his services in superintending the erection of a proposed new building which was to cost the sum upon which the architect's commission was to be paid. Taylor v. Middle Coal Field Poor Dist., 50 Pa. Super. 317.

75. Liability of officers for negli-county in furnishing relief to the poor acts in a governmental capacity,[76] and is not liable for injury caused by the negligence of its officers or employees,[77] or of inmates of a pauper institution.[78] On the same principle the county is not liable to a pauper for failure to furnish him proper relief, in the absence of a statute creating such liability.[79]

[§ 10] B. Officers[80]—1. In General. The nature of the office held by a poor law officer depends upon constitutional and statutory provisions.[81]

De facto officers. In accordance with the general rule[82] one who exercises the duties of an officer of the poor, with the acquiescence of the public or under color of appointment or election, is a de facto officer,[83] and his acts are valid and effectual so far as the public or the rights of third persons are concerned.[84] Accordingly, one who has been duly elected overseer of the poor and acts as such, without having taken the prescribed oath of office in the manner and time prescribed by statute, is a de facto officer whose acts as such are binding on the township.[85]

[§ 11] 2. Appointment and Election[86]—a. In General. Matters relating to the election[87] or appointment[88] of officers of a poor law district depend for the most part upon the particular statutory provisions.[89]

[§ 12] b. To Fill Vacancy.[90] The power conferred upon the legislature to provide for the election or appointment of an officer of the poor necessarily embraces the power to provide for the filling of vacancies in that office.[91] Usually vacancies in such offices are required to be filled by appointment,[92] but to justify an appointment it is of course gence or misconduct see infra § 26.

77. Peasley v. McKean County Poor Dist., supra. See Enders v. Dauphin County Poor Directors, 44 Pa. Co. 643 (holding that directors of the poor in Dauphin County constitute a corporation for the purpose of caring for the poor, and such corporation, being a public charity, is not liable for torts).

"A county, or poor district, acting as a public agency in the performance of governmental functions, is not liable for the negligence of its officers or employees. It is a part of the machinery which constitutes the public system, and it is organized almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the State at large, for the purpose of political organization, civil administration, and care of the destitute in matters of finance, of provision for the poor, and especially for the general administration of justice, and it is, therefore, invested with the immunity which attaches to the sovereign state." Wildoner v. Luzerne County Cent. Poor Dist., 267 Pa. 375, 377, 110 A 175.

[a] Directors or commissioners of the poor.—(1) In Kentucky, St. § 1840, giving the fiscal court jurisdiction to provide for the maintenance of the poor, gives that court authority to appoint a commissioner of the poor, which is not a constitutional or statutory office, but is created in the discretion of the fiscal court, which may provide for one or more, in accordance with its practice of caring for the poor. Silbersack v. Kraft, 194 Ky. 587, 240 SW 392. (2) In Pennsylvania directors of the poor holding their office under a special act of assembly erecting them into a corporate body are not county officers. Com. v. Sharetts, 231 Pa. 525, 80 A 1100; Nissley v. Lancaster County, 215 Pa. 562, 64 A 794; Phillips v. Kantner, 39 Pa. Super. 570. (3) But they are public municipal officers, although not so enumerated in the constitution. Com. v. Sharetts, supra.

[b] Superintendent of poorhouse.—(1) The superintendent of the county poor asylum is a public officer. Lake County v. Neuenfeldt, 78 Ind. A. 566, 136 NE 580. (2) In South Carolina, Civ. Code (1902) § 785 provides that the county board of commissioners shall have general supervision of the county poorhouse; and § 786 declares that the board shall be empowered to appoint a superintendent, with such assistance as may be needed to provide means for the employment of the inmates. Act of 1901 (23 St. at L. p 754) declares that the term "public officer" shall include all officers of the state previously commissioned, the trustees of the various colleges of the state, members of the various state boards, dispensary constables, and other persons whose duties are defined by law. It was held that a poorhouse superintendent appointed by a county board of commissioners was a public officer, defined as "one who is charged by law with duties involving an exercise of some part of the sovereign power, either small or great, in the performance of which the public is concerned, and which are continuing and not occasional or intermittent." [a] Power to elect.—In view of the legislative history on the subject of elections in the town of Cumberland, the act of 1856 conferred on the town council of such town the power to elect an overseer of the poor, and such power is not taken away by the act of 1896. Barber v. Broderick, 30 R. I. 460, 76 A 116.

[b] Time of election.—(1) Under Const. art 8 § 3, as amended in 1909 (P. L. p 951), providing that all elections for county, city, ward, borough, and township officers for regular terms of service shall be held on the municipal election day in each odd-numbered year, directors of the poor are to be voted for on that day, and such directors elected on a general election day in the even year are without title to office. Com. v. Sharetts, 231 Pa. 525, 80 A 1100. (2) Act March 10, 1875 (P. L. p 6), providing dates on which township officers shall be elected, does not repeal or modify Act Jan. 20, 1839 (P. L. p 337), relating to the election of managers for the relief and employment of the poor in the township of Germantown. Com. v. Roop, 217 Pa. 534, 66 A 869.

[c] Number to be elected.—The election by a town of only one overseer of the poor is valid under a statute giving the right to choose not exceeding twelve. Lyman v. Kennebunkport, 83 Me. 219, 22 A 102.

[d] Conduct of election.—Where the boundaries of a parish are not coextensive with an urban district council, or with any of the wards of the urban district, or where the county council has not given directions that the polls for the election of guardians and of urban district councilors shall be taken together, the clerk to the guardians, and not the clerk to the urban district council, is entitled to act as the returning officer at an election of guardians. [a] Appointment by city council.—New Brunswick Charter § 17, relating to the filling of vacancies, applies only to offices filled "at the annual charter election," and not to the office of overseer of the poor, a vacancy which was filled by appointment by the city council. Shultise v. O'Neill, 85 N. J. L. 15, 88 A 854.

necessary that a vacancy exist.[93] Hence, an appointment to fill a supposed vacancy caused by the expiration of the incumbent's term where, in fact, such term has not expired, is invalid.[94] Likewise, an appointment to fill a supposed vacancy, caused by an unlawful removal of an existing officer, is invalid.[95] A statute conferring the power to appoint and fill a vacancy must be strictly construed when the power is exercised, and a failure to observe a mandatory requirement of the statute renders the appointment invalid.[96]

[§ 13] 3. Eligibility and Qualification. The question of eligibility of a person to be officer of a poor law district depends upon the same principles that apply to other public officers,[97] and is generally a matter of statutory construction.[98] A person may be disqualified, under the various statutes because he has received public relief,[99] or has made a composition with his creditors,[1] or is concerned in a contract made with the poor law officers,[2] or is holding another office.[3] The disqualification of a person for the office of superintendent of the poor by reason of his holding another office must be determined by his status at the time of the election held to fill the office of superintendent; and, hence, his subsequent resignation from such other office will not remove his disability.[4] Although the statute provides that honorably discharged Union soldiers shall be preferred for appointment, the appointment of another applicant as poor officer by a board having the selection of a fit person to fill such office, after a determination in good faith of his superior fitness as compared with a discharged soldier, is not reviewable.[5]

Bond. It is usually provided that before entering upon the discharge of his duties the overseer of a poor law district shall give an official bond.[6]

Refusal to qualify; exemptions. A person appointed or elected as officer of the poor may claim exemption, and refuse to qualify.[7] In some jurisdictions the statutes impose a penalty on one refusing to serve,[8] but such penalty is not enforceable where the claim of exemption is sustained.[9]

[§ 14] 4. Term of Office.[10] The terms of officers of the poor law district are regulated by constitution or statute,[11] and are liable to be changed at any time by the legislature,[12] unless such charge is

[a] Medical officer.—(1) The words, "suitable graduate in medicine," as used in the County Government Act requiring the board of supervisors to appoint some suitable graduate of medicine to attend the indigent sick and dependent poor of the county, mean a person legally licensed to practice medicine under the laws of the state, and are not confined to college graduates. Peo. v. Eichelroth, 78 Cal. 141, 20 P 364, 2 LRA 770. (2) In England the local government board, if satisfied that adequate medical relief for the sick poor was secured, might, in the exercise of the discretion conferred on it, by Poor Relief (Ireland) Act (1851) § 8, require that the appointment of medical officers during the war should be confined to persons over military age. Rex v. Local Govt. Bd., [1918] 2 Ir. 131. (3) The court being satisfied that in the present case the local government board had exercised its discretion with due regard to the needs of the sick poor, the action of the board could not be questioned on the ground that it also had taken into consideration the national and military exigencies arising from the war. It was held that a member of a board of guardians who is concerned in a contract entered into with the board is disqualified for being a member, and the disqualification does not cease by reason of the termination of the contract. L. p 1052), changing the term of overseers from two to four years. Com. v. Bailey, 237 Pa. 609, 85 A 876; Stauffer v. Wertz, 21 Pa. Dist. 724, 39 Pa. Co. 502.

[b] Officer appointed to fill vacancy.—(1) A county board of supervisors has no power to fill a vacancy existing in the office of overseer of the poor for a longer period than its own term of office. Peo. v. Smith, 143 Ill. A. 232 [aff 236 Ill. 64, 86 NE 167]. (2) Under County L. § 220, an appointee to fill a vacancy in the office of county superintendent of the poor on the death of one duly elected holds over as against one disqualified at the time of his election, although he qualifies and resigns and is subsequently appointed, notwithstanding Public Officers' L. §§ 5, 38. [c] Particular statutes construed and applied.—Com. v. Bowditch, 217 Pa. 527, 66 A 867; South Williamsport Borough v. Miller, 20 Pa. Super. 266; Com. v. Greene County, 38 Pa. Co. 235.

12. Peo. v. Weldon, 14 NYS 447; prohibited by the constitution.[13] When the law provides that a poor officer shall hold office until his successor is qualified, the period between the expiration of his regular term and the qualification of his successor is as much a part of the incumbent's term of office as the fixed statutory term.[14] Where the statute authorizes the county board of commissioners to appoint a poorhouse superintendent, but fails to fix his term, such term is coextensive with the term of the board.[15] The custom of a county board of commissioners to elect a superintendent of the poorhouse for a period not extending beyond its own term cannot prevent the new board of commissioners from appointing a new supervisor to displace the appointee of the old board, for a term coextensive with the term of office of the new board.[16]

[§ 15] 5. Removal[17]—a. Power To Remove. A general authority to remove a poor officer will not be implied as a consequence of the power to appoint.[18] But where the statute provides that any officer appointed or employed by the county court shall hold office or employment at its pleasure, the court may dismiss the appointee at any time.[19] Usually the power to remove is regulated by statute,[20] and where such is the case can be exercised only within the prescribed limits.[21]

[§ 16] b. Grounds of Removal. Where express provision of law is made for removal, the power so to do can be exercised for no other causes than those specified.[22] It is misfeasance in office, authorizing the removal of a poor officer, to use his official power and the poor fund to coerce the recipients of his favor to vote under his direction;[23] or not to refund to the treasurer of the poor law district money which has been paid to him by persons to whom he has afforded temporary relief;[24] or to draw orders on the treasury of the poor law district in favor of persons without whose knowledge he himself draws the money, and compel the payees to take from himself at exorbitant prices such goods as he sees fit to give them.[25]

[§ 17] c. Proceedings To Remove. The proceeding for removal of an officer of a poor law district is of a quasi-judicial nature,[26] and statutory requirements must be observed.[27] The officer is entitled to notice of the charges against him.[28] While the rule is, in the absence of express provision of law, that the charges preferred against the officer must be sufficiently specific to apprise him of what he is to meet, yet the technical rules of pleading are not to be applied.[29]

[§ 18] 6. Compensation and Expenses.[30] The compensation of officers of the poor,[31] including reimbursement of expenses paid or incurred,[32] is usually a matter of statutory regulation,[33] and cannot rest on custom or usage.[34] Such an officer is entitled to compensation for services performed by him in his official capacity only when such services are authorized by law.[35]

[a] Removal by resolution of city council.—The overseer of the poor elected, under P. L. (1902) p 284 § 2, to perform the duties prescribed by § 19 of the act, is a city officer, within the meaning of § 7, providing that any city officer may be removed from office by resolution of the council for good cause shown on complaint, notice, and hearing. [a] County commissioners as poor law officers.—Act June 7, 1917 (P. L. p 570; Pa. St. [1920] §§ 7429–7431), providing for compensation to county commissioners who are also directors of the poor within counties of a given class, has reference to officers who actually perform duties of directors of the poor and county commissioners. Tucker's App., 271 Pa. 462, 114 A 626.

[b] Fixing salary; conditions precedent.—The law not requiring the physician, elected by the county board of health to attend the inmates of the county poorhouse and jail, to notify the county road and revenue commissioners of his acceptance of the office before they shall fix his salary, under Code (1907) § 703 subd "G," the fact that they had not been so notified was no ground for their refusal to act. Mobile County Revenue, etc., Comrs. v. State, 163 Ala. 441, 50 S 972.

[c] Particular statutes construed.—(1) Act July 2, 1895 (P. L. p 424), fixing the salaries of county directors of the poor in counties containing over one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, does not affect "directors of the poor and of the house of employment of the county of Lancaster," created by Act Febr. 27, 1798 (3 Smith L. p 306), they not being county officers and their salaries being fixed by Act April 14, 1864 (P. L. p 422). Nissley v. Lancaster County, 215 Pa. 562, 563, 64 A 794. (2) Nor does such act affect "Directors of the Poor and of the House of Employment for the County of Schuylkill," created by Act April 4, 1831 (P. L. p 422). Phillips v. Kantner, 39 Pa. Super. 570. [a] Statutes construed.—(1) Under County L. § 12 subd 5, authorizing the county board of supervisors to fix the compensation of the superintendent of the poor, which shall be a county charge, the personal expenses of the superintendent of the poor are not a county charge, unless made so by the board of supervisors. Strong v. Williams, 167 App. Div. 714, 153 NYS 175. (2) Poor L. § 3 subd 10, when read with subd 14, as amended by L. (1912) c 75, does not authorize a county superintendent of poor to draw money from the county treasurer to repay himself for money disbursed by him. Strong v. Williams, supra.

[b] Traveling expenses.—(1) Generally. Poor Directors v. Fayette County, 18 Pa. Dist. 53, 35 Pa. Co. 498; Mercer County v. Allen, 10 Pa. Co. 342; Blatt's App., 7 Pa. Co. 149. (2) Act May 13, 1889 (P. L. p 200), allowing directors of the poor traveling expenses, with the provision that the act shall not apply to directors in counties having special laws under which each director has a compensation of one hundred and fifty dollars or more, and that the act shall not repeal any local law regulating the same, does not apply to a poor director compensated under a local law, even though his per diem compensation may in some years amount in the aggregate to one hundred and fifty dollars. Increase of compensation. County commissioners who are also directors of the poor are "public officers" within the constitutional provisions forbidding an increase in the compensation of public officers during their term of office.[36]

Void appointment. If the appointment of a poor law officer is void, he is, of course, not entitled to compensation for his services,[37] notwithstanding the approval of his claim by the board of county commissioners;[38] and the county may recover money paid to him by the board.[39]

Pension or superannuation allowance. In England a statute provides for the payment of a pension or superannuation allowance to a poor law officer unable to discharge the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical infirmity, such allowance to be paid from a common fund to which each officer is required to contribute a percentage of his salary or emoluments.[40]

[§ 19] 7. Authority, Powers, and Duties[41]—a. In General. The powers and duties of overseers or other officers of the poor are prescribed by statute,[42] and are limited thereby.[43] They have no authority, as such officers, to intermeddle with the sons, and providing that all pauper insane must be transferred to a state hospital, and State Charities L. (L. [1896] pp 528, 532, 539, 545 c 546) §§ 68, 94, 109, 124, requiring the county superintendent of the poor to place epileptic paupers in the epileptic colony, and idiots in the proper asylum, etc., the superintendent of the poor of a county must provide for the conveyance of paupers to the proper institution or make provision for the conveyance, and, where a county superintendent receives an annual salary in full compensation for all his services, he can receive no other amount except by way of reimbursement for expenses incurred, and the board of supervisors is without authority to fix the compensation of the superintendent for conveying poor persons to the proper institutions. Peo. v. Westchester County, 65 Misc. 227, 119 NYS 695. (2) The board of county commissioners has no authority to instruct the county superintendent of the poor asylum to attend meetings of charitable organizations and reimburse him for his expenses so incurred, and its action in so doing is void, notwithstanding such attendance was requested by the state board of charities. 40. Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act of 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c 50).

[a] Contract in violation of act.—(1) The contributory scheme of superannuation allowances upon retirement instituted by the act is a compulsory statutory provision, both in the interests of the community and of the officers concerned, and binding upon guardians and their officers and servants alike, not a voluntary benefit which those officers can renounce at pleasure. It is, therefore, not competent for an officer to contract, wholly or partially, out of the scheme and scope of the act. Dewhurst v. Salford, [1925] 1 Ch. 655 [allowing app [1925] 1 Ch. 139, and aff [1926] A. C. 619]. (2) Thus poor law guardians cannot validly enter into an agreement with one of their officers or servants under which he is to receive something less than the pension or superannuation allowance provided by the statute. Dewhurst v. Salford, supra. (3) Nor can an officer or servant contract that a special war bonus shall be paid to him without deduction of the percentage prescribed by the statute, and that such bonus shall not be reckoned in calculating the pension due him on retirement. Dewhurst v. Salford, supra.

[b] Calculation of allowance; emoluments.—(1) Rex v. Ministry of Health, 92 L. J. K. B. 373. (2) Certain gratuities by the sanction of the minister of health were paid by a board of guardians to a registrar of births and deaths. Under Local Authorities (Expenses) Act (1887) § 3 and by virtue of the sanction of the minister these payments could not be disallowed by the district auditor. A statutory percentage was deducted from them as being part of his "emoluments" for the purpose of a superannuation allowance to which the registrar would be entitled on his retirement from office; and on his retirement he received an allowance which was based on an average of his remuneration by statutory fees of office plus the gratuities in the preceding five years. The district auditor disallowed so much of the allowance as was based on the gratuities and surcharged it on certain of the guardians and ex-guardians. It was held that the gratuities were part of the registrar's emoluments within the meaning of Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act (1896) § 12, and as the auditor was precluded from disallowing them by reason of the minister's sanction, he could not disallow that portion of the payment of the superannuation allowance which was based on an average of his remuneration consisting of the gratuities. Rex v. Grain, [1927] 2 K. B. 205 [aff [1927] 1 K. B. 540]. (3) A public vaccinator appointed by the guardians of a union or parish in accordance with the vaccination acts is not an "officer" or "servant" of the guardians within the definition of Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act (1896) § 10, and therefore the emoluments of a public vaccinator who is also district medical officer are not to be taken into account in calculating the amount of superannuation allowance to which he is entitled under that act. Lawson v. Marlborough Union, [1912] 2 Ch. 154.

[c] Death of one joint appointee.—By the proviso to § 8 of the act, where "the death . . . of one of the holders of a joint appointment" under the guardians of a union "vacates the office of the other, the officer or servant whose office or employment is vacated, shall, unless he is reappointed by the guardians . . . be entitled to receive during life, out of the common fund of the union, a superannuation allowance . . . if such officer or servant . . . has served for not less than twenty years." It was held that by virtue of § 4 of the same act such an officer was entitled to a superannuation allowance if his aggregate service under guardians of various unions amounted to twenty years, although his service under the guardians of the particular union had only extended over a shorter period. Price v. Eastbourne Union, [1920] 1 Ch. 535.

[d] Forfeiture of allowance.—(1) If the officer resigns or is dismissed "in consequence of any offense of a fraudulent character, or of grave misconduct" he forfeits his claim to an allowance. Under this provision the term "grave misconduct" is not limited by the words "fraudulent character," but means misconduct of a very serious character and of a higher standard than that which would justify an employer in dismissing his servant for misconduct. Poad v. Scarborough, [1914] 3 K. B. 959. (2) Plaintiff, who had been in the employment of defendants as relieving officer and collector for a number of years, had been in the habit of retaining and using for his own purpose the moneys which he collected on behalf of defendants, and only paying the sums he had collected into defendants' account every three months. He did this without any intention of defrauding his employers. He was told by defendants that this system must cease and that he must pay monthly into the account of the guardians the sums which he collected; but he reverted to his old practice, and neglected to pay into defendants' account monthly moneys which he had received during the month, and he was not in a position to repay those moneys until he received his salary in the following month. Upon being asked to resign, he sent in his resignation, and subsequently claimed a superannuation allowance alleging that he had become incapable of discharging the duties of his office by reason of permanent infirmity. It was held that the irregularities with regard to the money collected by plaintiff on behalf of defendants amounted to "grave misconduct" within the meaning of Superannuation Act § 7, and that, having in consequence thereof ceased to hold office, he had forfeited all claim to any superannuation allowance. Poad v. Scarborough, supra.

[c] Assuming parental control; resolution.—(1) In England, where guardians desire to exercise the powers of parental control over pauper children given to them by Poor Law Act (1899) § 1 subs 1 (ii), a resolution to the effect that they are of opinion that the parent of the child is unfit, by reason of the existence of some one or more of the conditions set out in subs 1 (ii) of the section, is a condition precedent to the exercise of such power; and accordingly, where the guardians assumed parental control of children, purporting to act under the section, without having passed such a resolution, the court, upon the application of the parent, granted a writ of habeas corpus directed against the guardians to release such children. In re McGlynn, [1913] 2 Ir. 337. (2) Where guardians of the poor passed a resolution that a child chargeable to the union should be placed under their control until she reached the age of eighteen, and more than two years afterward the mother of the child knowingly assisted her to leave, without the consent of the guardians, the place where she was under the control of the guardians, it was not necessary, in a prosecution for that offense, for the guardians to prove the grounds upon which the resolution was passed, or that such grounds were good grounds, within Poor Law Act § 1. County commissioners as poor law officers.[63] In counties in which the county commissioners also act as overseers or directors of the poor the two offices are regarded as separate entities, with separate powers and duties fixed by statute.[64]

[§ 20] b. As to Indebtedness and Expenditures—(1) For Relief and Support—(a) In General. The powers of poor officers as to incurring indebtedness and making expenditures for the care and support of paupers are strictly limited by the statutes relating to the maintenance of the poor, and they cannot ordinarily step beyond the letter of those acts.[65] Being public officers, who have the care and oversight of paupers, by necessary implication they have the power to bind their town or county by any contracts made within the scope of their authority,[66] and liability thereunder cannot be defeated by failure or refusal to vote the necessary taxes to meet the obligation.[67] Officers of the poor are not restricted to the confines or instrumentalities of the poorhouse in making provision for the poor,[68] unless the statute expressly or impliedly so provides.[69]

Extending relief without previous order. Overseers of the poor have no authority to appropriate the moneys of the town or bind it for the support of a pauper without an order from a justice of the peace or superintendent of the poor, where such order is required by statute,[70] at least where the expenditure is greater than a sum fixed by statute.[71]

sistance.[90] But where the county board has made adequate provision for medical attendance to paupers within the county, a township trustee or overseer of the poor has no authority to employ medical or surgical services for paupers within his township.[91] So where a statute expressly prohibits payment by a county board for medical services to poor persons unless done under contract with such board, a physician cannot recover for such services whether rendered voluntarily or at the request of the township board.[92] The question as to the necessities of the person relieved is a matter for the determination of the trustee, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, his determination is conclusive.[93] So whether or not the township is otherwise provided for is a question of fact to be determined by the trustees.[94]

Relief to persons in cities. The mere fact that the person to whom relief is furnished is found ill within a third class city lying within the township will not take away the jurisdiction of the township, having jurisdiction throughout the township, to furnish such relief.[95] But it has been held that, where a city overseer of the poor is provided for by statute as well as township trustees, the city overseer has exclusive control of the city poor, and there can be no recovery for medical attendance furnished a city pauper on the order of the township trustees.[96]

Unusual or extraordinary services. Poor officers cannot bind a town or county for unusual or extraordinary medical services rendered the poor of such town or county at the request of such overseers, or subsequently ratified by them.[97] This rule is applicable to the conduct of post mortem examinations,[98] and to the treatment of a pauper to cure him of habitual drunkenness as a disease.[99]

[§ 23] c. Power To Audit Accounts. Compliance with statutory provisions as to the audit of accounts of overseers of the poor[1] is essential;[2] but an audit will not be rendered invalid by mere irregularities in the proceedings.[3] A statute requiring superintendents of the poor to audit and allow all accounts of overseers of the poor, justices of the peace, and all other persons, for services relating to the support, relief or transportation of county paupers,[4] does not require the audit and allowance of accounts in favor of individuals dealing with the overseers in the several towns. Such accounts may be very numerous and occasionally trifling and should be first adjusted by the overseers, and charged by them in general account.[5] Nor does their auditing power extend to their own contracts.[6] A claim of an attorney for services rendered by him in bastardy proceedings is not one relating to the "support, relief or transportation" of paupers within the meaning of the statute.[7] It is not necessary that an account for the support of a pauper in a county having a county poorhouse should be audited by the town auditors.[8]

In England, where the accounts of guardians of the poor are submitted to an auditor in the first instance, subject to confirmation by the local government board,[9] a district auditor's certificate surcharging a guardian need not be signed at the public audit, but may be signed by the auditor subsequently.[10]

[§ 24] d. Powers of Part of Officers. Where the statute declares that a majority of the superintendents of the poor of a county shall be competent to transact business and execute any powers of the board,[11] a majority may act irrespective of, and without consultation with, the minority,[12] and without any authorization of the board at a formal meeting.[13] The general rule is that a minority of the board of overseers or superintendents of the poor cannot bind the county or town by their acts or contracts, even concerning matters within the scope of the board's authority, but at least a majority of the board must act in order to validate such proceedings.[14] And it has been held that overseers of the poor not being a corporate body, the act of one overseer does not bind another in his official character.[15]

Exceptions to rule. A single member of the board of overseers or superintendents of the poor may bind the county or town where he has been empowered to act by the rest of the board,[16] or, as held in some cases, where the necessity for relief is urgent,[17] in which case the assent of the other officers may be presumed.[18] It has also been held that the signature of one overseer of the poor to a complaint is sufficient,[19] and that a warrant may issue on an information made by a single director.[20] Where the statute provides that every board of township trustees "and the members thereof" shall be overseers of the poor, a single trustee may act so as to bind the town.[21]

Ratification. The action of one, or less than the majority, of the overseers of the poor may thereafter be ratified by a majority of the board, so as to validate the same.[22]

[§ 25] 8. Liability of Officers and Their Sureties—a. Civil Liability—(1) Of Officers on Contracts. An overseer or superintendent of the poor, acting within the line of his duty and by legal authority and contracting for the use of the public, is not personally responsible on the contract,[23] unless his personal liability is superadded in clear and explicit terms.[24] And where the res gestæ and the attending circumstances show the contract to be on the public account, it is not necessary, in order to screen himself from personal liability, that the officer should expressly say that he contracts in his official capacity.[25] But if the officer makes a contract without sufficient authority legally to bind the poor law district, he is personally responsible thereon,[26] notwithstanding the contract is made in the name of the district;[27] and this is true even where the officer in making the contract acts upon the subject matter within the scope of his authority, if, because of his failure to take a prerequisite step to clothe himself therewith, he has no power to bind the public.[28]

[§ 26] (2) Of Officers for Negligence or Misconduct.[29] A poor officer who is negligent in the performance of a duty imposed on him by law,[30] or is guilty of misconduct in office,[31] is personally liable in damages therefor. So where an overseer of the poor wholly neglects his duty in providing for a pauper, he is liable to the pauper for the injuries sustained,[32] but a third person has no right of action against him for such neglect.[33] On the other hand it has been held that, where there is no statute creating liability against a county or district for failure to furnish relief to paupers, a member of the county board who is an overseer of the poor is not personally liable to a pauper for failure to furnish such relief.[34]

[§ 27] (3) Of Officers and Sureties on Official Bonds[35]—(a) In General. The liability of sureties on the official bond of a poor officer generally depends upon the terms of the bond,[36] as well as upon the intention of the statute under which it is

[a] In England (1) an assistant overseer is not the servant of the overseers, but of the vestry. As there is statutory recognition of the office of assistant overseer, the overseers are not liable for his acts in the same way as a sheriff is for the acts of his subordinates. Therefore, where an assistant overseer is party to an excessive distress in the execution of a distress warrant issued for nonpayment of rates, the overseers do not incur liability unless they do some act which makes them responsible. Baker v. Wicks, [1904] 1 K. B. 743. (2) The relieving officer of a union, acting under Lunacy Act (1890) § 20, was honestly satisfied that it was necessary to remove plaintiff, as an alleged dangerous lunatic, to the workhouse, and plaintiff was accordingly removed and detained there. In an action for false imprisonment the jury found that the relieving officer did not take reasonable care to satisfy himself that plaintiff was a dangerous lunatic. It was held that as the officer was honestly satisfied he was protected by the section. Harward v. Hackney Union, 14 T. L. R. 306.

36. Cosford v. Poor Law Guarantee Assoc., 103 L. T. Rep. N. S. 463.

[a] Acts held not covered by bond.—A was appointed assistant overseer of a parish and, by virtue of his appointment under Local Govt. Act (1894) § 17 subs 2, he became clerk to the parish council. Defendant entered into a bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties as assistant overseer. A committed defalcations in respect of moneys received by him as clerk to the parish council. In an action to recover the amount of such defalcations under the guaranty given by defendants, it was held that the defalcations of A in relation to the parish council accounts were not covered by the terms of the bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties in the office of assistant overseer. Cosford drawn.[37] Allowances to persons not adjudicated to be paupers are illegal,[38] and the officers making such allowances are liable on their official bonds.[39]

Period of liability. The engagement of the sureties is for the future, and, in the absence of special stipulation to that effect, they are not liable for moneys actually received by their principal prior to the term for which they are bound.[40]

[§ 28] (b) Actions on Bonds.[41] An action on the bond in behalf of the county must be brought in the name of the county officer who is the payee of the bond.[42]

Limitations. A statute providing that an action against an overseer for the nonpayment of money collected on execution must be brought within three years does not apply to an action on the official bond of an overseer of the poor to recover money alleged to have come into his hands as such overseer.[43]

Pleading. An action against a collector of poor taxes upon his bond by the overseers of the poor cannot be maintained without averment in the complaint that plaintiffs are overseers at the time of the institution of the suit.[44]

Evidence. The official verified reports, filed by the overseer of the poor from time to time as required by statute, are competent against his sureties in an action against them on his official bond, as proof of the condition of his accounts both as to receipts and disbursements.[45] But evidence that certain members of the town board knew before the bond in question was executed that the overseer of the poor of the town was short in his accounts is not competent for the purpose of relieving sureties on the latter's bond from liability.[46]

[§ 29] b. Criminal Responsibility[47] and Penalties. Overseers, supervisors, and superintendents of the poor are public officers,[48] and as such are liable to criminal prosecution for neglect of duty or abuse of powers, either at common law[49] or by statute,[50] even after their terms have expired.[51] If, however, the duty imposed upon such officers is a discretionary one, an omission of such duty is not indictable.[52]

Indictment. The indictment must allege that the overseers willfully neglected their duty as such, or must contain other terms equivalent thereto,[53] and should name the paupers neglected or injured, or state a reason for not doing so.[54]

Evidence. Where the indictment charges merely neglect and omission of duty, evidence of acts of positive misfeasance is inadmissible.[55]

Penalties.[56] The nature and extent of liability under a statute imposing a penalty on overseers of the poor for violation of a duty imposed by law depends upon the terms of the statute.[57]

[§ 30] 9. Actions by or against Officers.[58] It has been held that since an overseer, supervisor, or superintendent of the poor, in discharging his duty as such, is sub modo a corporation,[59] he has the capacity of suing and being sued so far as his trust is concerned,[60] and such right to sue and liability

[a] Omission of statute to provide that officer shall be liable on a bond for nonperformance of a given duty.—(1) Where the statute requires an officer to collect the poor tax, and that he shall give a bond to the effect that he will pay over all moneys so collected, and the bond given by him so provides, the fact that the statute does not provide that the officer shall be liable on his official bond for the nonperformance of his official duty in collecting the taxes does not affect the liability of the sureties on his bond. Meagher County v. Gardner, 18 Mont. 110, 44 P 407. (2) Where a former statute, providing for the collection of a poor tax by the county assessor also provided that he should be liable on his official bond for the money so collected, was practically reënacted in a subsequent act, with the exception of the provision in respect of the liability on his bond, this omission does not release the sureties on his bond from liability for taxes collected and embezzled by him subsequent to such reënactment, where the condition of the bond was that the officer should pay over all the moneys coming into his hands as such. to suit, being incident to his office, passes to his successor.[61] A superintendent of the poor may sue either in his corporate name alone,[62] or in his individual name with the addition of his name of office.[63] However, in some jurisdictions it has been held that overseers of the poor are not a corporate body and cannot sue in their own names for moneys of the township expended for a pauper,[64] and that they cannot be sued by a third person for services and supplies furnished to a pauper;[65] but that such actions must be brought by or against the township in its corporate name.[66]

Where an overseer acts merely as agent of the town in receiving money, the right of the town to retain the money cannot be tried in an action against the overseer.[67]

Right of action against predecessor. An overseer of the poor may sue his predecessor in office for moneys officially received by him and unaccounted for.[68]

Discontinuance of action.[69] Where suit is commenced by two overseers of the poor, it cannot be discontinued by one of them alone without the consent of the other;[70] nor can a suit begun by overseers of the poor be discontinued by them after the expiration of their term of office and after others have been elected in their places.[71]

Submission to arbitration. An overseer of the poor has power to submit a claim to arbitration.[72]

[§ 31] C. Poorhouses and Poor Farms[73]—1. In General. In many jurisdictions the statutes creating poor districts provide for the purchase of lands, and the erection of buildings for housing paupers, designating the officers who shall have the control and management thereof.[74] The powers conferred by such statutes include those arising by necessary implication from those expressly given.[75] Authority given to public authorities of a county to provide for the maintenance of the poor and to establish poorhouses for that purpose does not prevent such authorities from providing for the poor by overseers of the poor, no persons having been specially chosen overseers, may sue in their capacity as selectmen. Powers v. Ware, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 451.

[b] Action of replevin.—It is no part of the duty, nor within the power, of the overseer of the poor to bring an action of replevin for property alleged to belong to the town. Baldwin v. Whittier, 16 Me. 33.

[c] Limitations.—(1) A breach by the guardians of a union of a private contract entered into by them in the performance of their public duties is not "a neglect or default" in the execution "of any public duty or authority" within the meaning of Public Authorities Protection Act (1893) § 1, and consequently the limit of six months prescribed by § 1 (a) for the commencement of proceedings does not apply to a reference to arbitration in respect of such breach. Sharpington v. Fulham, [1904] 2 Ch. 449. (2) A demand for a reference to arbitration under an arbitration clause in a building contract in respect of an alleged breach of that contract by the guardians of a union is not a commencement of proceedings within the meaning of Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act (1859) § 4, and a claim for damages for breach of such a contract does not constitute "a debt claim or demand lawfully incurred or become due" within the meaning of § 1 of that act until the amount of the damage has been ascertained either by the award of an arbitrator or in some other manner provided by law. Sharpington v. Fulham, supra.

other modes,[76] and they may accordingly appropriate funds to defray the expense of buildings erected by a charitable society for the maintenance and education of poor children.[77] The repeal of local acts providing for the erection of a poorhouse will not operate retrospectively so as to give validity to proceedings brought under a general statute instead of under the local acts.[78]

[§ 32] 2. Officers and Inmates. In some jurisdictions it has been held that county commissioners have no authority to appoint a keeper of the poorhouse for a specified term so as to deprive themselves or their successors of the power of removal.[79] So it has been held that an appointment of a keeper for a term of three years is against public policy.[80] On the other hand it has been held that, in the absence of any statutory restriction on the power of the county board, the employment of a poorhouse superintendent for a term of five years is not against public policy.[81] A constitutional provision that the terms of all officers shall be for some specified period applies to the appointment of a committee to take charge of the county poorhouse,[82] and officers claiming under a statute which fails to comply with the constitution are without warrant of office.[83] A continued course of dealing by the town with an overseer of the poor under which he appointed himself keeper of the town farm, and his wife matron, constitutes a ratification of the arrangement, which will preclude the town from recovering possession of the farm until the expiration of the keeper's current annual period of service.[84]

Control and management of inmates.[85] While the superintendent or keeper of the poorhouse or poor farm has such powers for the correction of inmates as are reasonably necessary to keep order and regulate their conduct generally,[86] he may render himself criminally[87] or civilly[88] liable if he acts in an unnecessarily severe manner. So a keeper of a county poor farm has been held civilly liable for neglect causing injury to an inmate.[89]

Removal of pauper; criminal responsibility of keeper. The keeper of a county poorhouse is criminally liable under a statute making it a misdemeanor for any persons to remove a pauper to another county without legal authority,[90] although the removal is made by him on the order of the superintendent of the poor.[91]

Criminal responsibility of inmates. In some jurisdictions the statute makes a pauper inmate of the workhouse subject to criminal prosecution for misbehavior.[92] Willful disobedience of a lawful order of a workhouse officer is not necessarily "misbehavior" within the meaning of such a statute.[93]

[§ 33] D. Local Taxation for Relief of Poor.[94] In many jurisdictions statutes provide for local taxation for the relief and support of paupers, and designate the courts, officers, or boards who shall have power to levy the tax, and in some instances prescribe the method of levy and the amount which may be levied.[95] Such taxes can be levied only

[a] In Georgia, prior to the adoption of the code, the inferior courts had authority, under Cobb Dig. p 347, to raise a special tax not exceeding one eighth of the general county tax for the support of paupers. Tucker v. Justices Lee County Inferior Ct., 34 Ga. 370.

[b] In Illinois, while L. (1861) p 135 require the several towns in Kankakee County to support paupers residing within their limits, as well as nonresident paupers chargeable as such therein, the county may maintain a county poorhouse and fix the rate which each town will pay for the support of its paupers therein, or transient persons not chargeable to any town may be maintained therein, so that such county, having established a county poorhouse, may levy a tax for the care of paupers. Peo. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 248 Ill. 118, 93 NE 761; Peo. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 247 Ill. 506, 93 NE 421.

[c] In Iowa Code (1873) § 1381, providing that county supervisors may levy a tax of one mill on the dollar for the support of the poor when the ordinary means are insufficient, was amended by Acts (1876) c 149, by striking out "one mill" and substituting "one and one half mills," but such amendment provided that the act should not apply to counties whose population is less than thirty-three thousand. It was held that the amendment did not affect the right to levy a tax under § 1381, in counties whose population is less than thirty-three thousand. Lucas County v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 67 Iowa 541, 543, 25 NW 769.

[d] In Kansas, under Comp. L. (1879) c 79 § 35, county commissioners are authorized to levy and assess a tax for the support of the poor of their respective counties in an amount not in excess of five hundred dollars, without a previous vote of the people at a general election authorizing the levy. Pleasant Hill, etc., R. Co. v. Carpenter, 33 Kan. 216, 6 P 287; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Albright, when authorized by statute,[96] and the statutory method of levy must be followed.[97] A statute giving the county court power to levy the county levy and to provide for the maintenance of the poor does not authorize it to levy an ad valorem tax for pauper purposes;[98] nor is an ad valorem tax for pauper purposes authorized by a statute authorizing the county court to purchase land for poorhouse purposes and to levy a sufficient sum to pay for the improvements.[99] A special tax for the building or repairing of a county poorhouse must specify such purpose, and cannot be levied under the general phrase "pauper tax."[1]

Discretionary action. Where authority is given to the inhabitants of a town to raise such sum as they shall judge necessary for the support of the poor, the matter cannot be left to the discretion of the selectmen of the town.[2]

[§ 34] E. Custody and Disposition of Proceeds of Taxation and Poor Funds. The statutes usually make the overseers or other officers of the poor custodians of money raised for the support of the poor,[3] and the treasurer of a borough in which a poor district is located has no right to the custody of the poor district funds.[4] Where an officer of the poor pays out money for the support of a pauper, or contracts for his support, he is entitled to appropriate money in the first case, and retain it in his own hands in the other.[5] Such officers, however, are not jointly liable for money collected by them severally in their official capacity.[6] Where the directors of a poor district are authorized to appoint tax collectors, but instead of doing so make use of the collectors severally elected in the boroughs and townships comprising the district, the sureties on the general official bond of a collector so employed are not liable for moneys collected but not accounted for by him.[7]

Application and apportionment of funds. The application and apportionment of poor funds and the proceeds of tax levies must be made in compliance with provisions of the constitution[8] and statutes.[9]

[e] In Kentucky, under the act of March 9, 1871, regulating taxation for the support of negro paupers, the county court is bound to levy a tax and provide means to pay for allowance made for the support of such paupers in years previous to the passage of the act. Featherston v. Thompson, 10 Bush 140.

[f] In Maine (1) provisions requiring towns to relieve and support the poor do not apply to plantations. Blakesburg v. Jefferson, 7 Me. 125. (2) They may raise money for the support of the poor, but are not obliged to do so. Means v. Blakesburg, 7 Me. 132.

[g] In Michigan it has been held that the support of the poor is an ordinary expense for which a township board is authorized to levy a tax when the electors of the township have failed to make any provision thereof. Weston Lumber Co. v. Munising Tp., 123 Mich. 138, 82 NW 267.

[h] In Mississippi Rev. Code p 210 art 2, authorizing the board of police of the several counties to raise revenue for the support of the poor, and Rev. Code p 416 art 16, authorizing such board to raise revenue for general county purposes, are distinct and independent statutes under which the tax contemplated by the former may be levied and collected, even though the power conferred by the latter has been exhausted. Coulson v. Harris, 43 Miss. 728.

[i] In New York (1) it has been held that the fact that a county poor superintendent has failed to comply with Poor L. § 11, requiring him to present to the board of supervisors at its annual meeting an estimate of the sum necessary for the support of the county poor for the ensuing year, but has reported the cost for support of both town and county poor for the preceding year, which amount was apportioned by the supervisors among the several towns under § 9 in accordance with the number of poor of each town, such amounts being levied and collected by the several towns, does not give a town any cause for complaint, the only difference in result being that, instead of each town raising an estimated amount and placing it in the hands of the county treasurer for the support of its poor, the county first paid for such support and later was reimbursed by the towns. Islip v. Suffolk County, 191 App. Div. 284, 181 NYS 203 [app dism 229 N. Y. 632 mem, 129 NE 937 mem]. (2) The fact that, under Poor L. §§ 8-11, not enough money has been raised directly by the towns, based upon the number of town poor in the almshouse, but that the county has raised and paid more than its proportionate share of the maintenance of the almshouse, and for such sum has levied upon the several towns in accordance with the assessed valuation, does not give rise to cause of action on the part of a town for the excess which the town has been thus forced to pay, the town never having had any interest in such money. Islip v. Suffolk County, supra. (3) Where the county superintendent of the poor has exercised his judgment as to the amount chargeable to the towns of the county under Poor L. §§ 8, 9, 11, and the board of supervisors has approved it, and levied and collected taxes in accordance therewith its decision should not be disturbed. Islip v. Suffolk County, supra. (4) Under L. (1845) c 334, known as the Livingstown County Act, the board of town auditors is to make an estimate of the amount which will be required for the support of the poor for the ensuing year to be laid before the board of supervisors, and the latter board is required to cause the sum so estimated to be levied and collected in the town and paid to the overseers. Osterhoudt v. Rigney, 98 N. Y. 222 [aff 27 Hun 167]. (5) The estimate must embrace, not only the sum which the board of auditors shall deem necessary for the support of the poor during the ensuing year, but also such sum as shall be required to supply any deficiency in the preceding year. Osterhoudt v. Rigney, supra.

[j] In Virginia (1) under a former law, the sheriff was bound to collect poor taxes if appointed by the overseers of the poor to do so, but otherwise not. Munford v. Nottoway Overseers of Poor, 2 Rand. (23 Va.) 313. (2) But a later statute made it the sheriff's official duty to collect such taxes in all cases. Munford v. Nottoway Overseers of Poor, supra.

St. (1837) c 238 § 3 (the Alien Passenger Act), provides that money received by towns and cities under such act shall be appropriated for the support of foreign paupers. Under these acts it has been held that vagrants sent to the house of correction are not "foreign paupers," al-

Limitation of amount of indebtedness.[10] A constitutional limitation on the amount of indebtedness which a county or municipality may incur applies to indebtedness for pauper supplies.[11]

III. SETTLEMENT AND REMOVAL[12]

[§ 35] A. Nature of Legal Settlement—1. In General. The word "settlement" in reference to paupers is technical and is used exclusively in relation to the dispensing of public charity.[13] When it is said that a person has a "settlement" in a particular town or county, the meaning is that such town or county is legally bound to support him in case of need.[14] There is a clear distinction between the place of legal settlement and the place of residence,[15] and also between the place of settlement and the place of domicile, as the latter term is used in general or international law.[16]

Source of law as to settlement. In the absence of statutory provisions fixing the settlement of paupers, the common and statutory law of England as it existed prior to the independence of the United States has been recognized as of force in the United States.[17]

[§ 36] 2. Estoppel To Deny.[18] A town or county may by its acts and admissions estop itself to deny the settlement of a pauper therein,[19] unless such admissions are made under an excusable mistake of material facts.[20] But it has been held that neither the acts nor the admissions of overseers of the poor will estop a town to deny the settlement of a pauper.[21] Nor will a town be estopped to contest a settlement by the mere fact that it has furnished supplies and support for the pauper,[22] although that fact is evidence of the pauper's settlement in the town.[23]

The statutes in some jurisdictions expressly provide that, in a suit by one town against another for the support of a pauper, a recovery shall bar the town against which it is had from disputing the settlement of the pauper with the other town in any future action brought for his support.[24] The word "recovery" is construed to mean the obtaining of a final judgment,[25] and to apply to both plaintiff and defendant towns.[26] There is no "recovery" which will amount to an estoppel where defendant settles the action by paying the claim;[27] nor does the recovery estop third persons not parties to the proceedings.[28] The words "future action" have been held to mean an action to be tried after a judg-though they have no settlement in the commonwealth, and hence money received under the act cannot be appropriated for their support. Opinion of Justices, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 572.

[b] Application of income of poorhouse fund.—Where the city of Rochester was by law in the condition of a town in respect of the mode of supporting its poor at the county poorhouse, the income of the poorhouse farm in that county was to be applied indiscriminately to the support of the county, town, and city poor, kept at the county poorhouse on such farm. "It is plain that 'settlement' is not synonymous with 'domicile.' The statutes on the subject usually provide that a person who shall reside in any poor district for a given period of one, two, or more years and who fulfills the other requirements of the statute shall thereby acquire a legal settlement therein. A person may have to reside for years in a place to acquire a settlement therein although he may acquire a domicile at such place as soon as he arrives. The length of time a person resides in a place to which he goes with the animus manendi is immaterial as respects his acquisition of a domicile. Winans v. [§ 37] B. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions—1. Power of Legislature. The legislature has full power to fix the settlement of paupers[31] and prescribe what shall constitute such settlement.[32] The legislature may likewise enact general laws which alter the rules of settlement, although they may operate to transfer from one town to another the duty of supporting particular persons,[33] or may give a settlement in some particular town to a person who previously had none in the state,[34] and such laws do not ordinarily impair vested rights[35] or the obligation of contracts.[36] But it has been held that, where the marriage of a female pauper was made valid by a resolve of the legislature, the derivative settlement which she thus acquired could not operate to oblige the town, thus newly charged with her maintenance, to pay for her support before the passing of the resolve, without disturbing vested rights.[37]

[§ 38] 2. Construction and Operation of Statutes—a. General Rules. General rules[38] are applicable in construing statutes in reference to the settlement and removal of paupers.[39] Such statutes are to be given effect according to their manifest intention[40] and obvious import.[41] In determining the legislative intent, the effects and consequences of the proposed construction of a statute, as well as its reason and spirit, will be considered;[42] and if there is room for construction the court will prefer that which is most consonant with the purpose for which the act was passed.[43] The words "residents" as used in many of the statutes providing for the support of paupers is held to import a domicile only, in contradistinction to such a residence as would by the general law be necessary to confer a settlement,[44] and one in a town, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, and in need of immediate relief, is "residing" there, within the meaning of the paupers' acts.[45] But the word "belongs," when used in a statute in reference to the poor, designates the place of legal settlement of the persons referred to.[46]

[§ 39] b. Retroactive Operation.[47] Unless a statute relating to the settlement of paupers contains a retroactive provision, it does not take away a settlement acquired before it went into effect.[48] Unless the act is made retroactive by its terms,[49] it will not be construed to give, on the strength of residence prior to the act, a settlement to a person who had none prior thereto,[50] and such an act, although made retrospective by its terms, does not give a settlement to a person who died before its passage, and by derivation to his children;[51] nor does it apply to a person who had ceased to become a resident of the state many years before its passage, so as to give a settlement by derivation to his sons and their wives.[52] Under an act operating retrospectively, so as to give an unsettled woman a settlement upon the completion of a term of residence therein mentioned, the words "unsettled woman" means a woman unsettled at the time the statute takes effect,[53] and does not apply to a woman who has derived a settlement through her father[54] or husband[55] before the passage of the act. The derivative residence of a married woman may be based upon her situation prior to the time when the act relating thereto took effect.[56]

Repealing acts. In accordance with the general rule[57] the repeal of a statute relating to the acquisition of settlements does not affect settlements already acquired thereunder, unless it is so provided.[58] But where a statute providing a mode by which a settlement may be gained is repealed before a settlement thereunder has become complete, no settlement will be gained by a subsequent continued performance of the requirements of the statute, unless there is a saving clause with regard to embryo settlements.[59]

[§ 40] c. Repeal.[60] The rule that, where two legislative acts are repugnant to, or in conflict with, each other, the one last passed must govern, although it contains no repealing clause,[61] applies to statutes relating to the settlement of paupers;[62] and where a later act covers the whole subject of earlier acts and it is apparent that it was the legislative intent to enact an entirely new system of laws, such earlier acts are repealed.[63] But where the later act indicates a legislative intention merely to afford a new and additional remedy to that provided by the earlier act, the earlier act is not repealed.[64]

[§ 41] C. Settlement by Birth[65]—1. In General. The place of a pauper's birth is prima facie the place of his settlement.[66] But this presumption may be overcome by showing a different settlement derived by the pauper from his father or mother, or one subsequently acquired by acts of his own.[67]

[§ 42] 2. Bastards.[68] The place of birth of a bastard ordinarily fixes its settlement, both at common law,[69] and under some statutes, as construed by the courts,[70] unless some trick has been practiced

[a] In Delaware, under a statute providing that the birth place of a person shall be the place of his legal settlement, the settlement of an illegitimate child is the place of its birth, although it was begotten elsewhere. Smith v. State, Houst. Cr. 107.

[b] In England (1) under Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act (1876) § 35, providing that where an inquiry into the derivative settlement of father or mother would otherwise be involved, the place of a pauper's birth is the place of his settlement, and that an illegitimate child shall retain the settlement of its mother until it acquires another, where an illegitimate pauper was born in one place and his mother in to change the place of birth,[71] as where the birth is fraudulently or collusively caused to happen there,[72] or unless the mother has been transported or conducted thither under legal authority,[73] or the child is born while an order of removal is being executed and before it can be completely fulfilled.[74] But if after the order of removal has been executed the woman returns to the place from which she was removed, and is there delivered, the place of birth is the bastard's place of settlement.[75] In some jurisdictions the place of birth of an illegitimate child is held to be its legal settlement only when it appears that the mother has not a legal settlement elsewhere.[76]

[§ 43] D. Acquired Settlement—1. In General. The power of acquiring a settlement is a personal privilege, and the laws regulating the settlement of paupers are not intended to fix merely the liabilities of the several towns or poor districts inter se. This follows from the fact that as a general rule paupers may be removed to their place of settlement, and therefore the power of determining for themselves where to live is among the most valuable that can be enumerated.[77] The statutes[78] prescribe the persons who may acquire[79] and the mode of acquiring[80] settlements, and compliance with all the provisions of such statutes is, of course, essential to the acquisition of a legal settlement.[81]

[§ 44] 2. Who May Acquire—a. In General. The question who may acquire a settlement in his own right is, of course, regulated by, and dependent upon, the provisions of the statutes.[82] A person cannot have two settlements at the same time,[83] nor can two towns be bound to support the same pauper at the same time;[84] and hence one cannot gain a settlement in his own right in the same town in which he derives a settlement from his father.[85]

Indians residing within the limits of a town and being under jurisdiction of persons appointed by the government have no legal settlement in the town.[86]

[§ 45] b. Aliens.[87] Under the provisions of some statutes an alien can gain no settlement by commorancy,[88] but under others he may.[89] A stat-

another, neither of them having acquired a settlement of her own, and it could not be determined what settlement the child derived from her mother without inquiring into the mother's derivative settlement, the settlement of the child was the place of her birth. [a] "Every person of full age."—Poor L. (Consol. L. [1909] c 42) § 40, providing that every person of full age who shall be a resident and inhabitant of any town or city for one year, and the members of his family who shall not have gained a separate settlement, shall be deemed settled in such town or city, and shall so remain until he shall have gained a like settlement in some other town or city, or shall remove from the state and remain therefrom one year, is intended to provide a settlement for every person, whether he be poor or not. Matter of Chamberlain, 73 Misc. 256, 258, 132 NYS 681; Matter of Porter, 68 Misc. 124, 124 NYS 162.

[b] "Healthy" and "able-bodied" persons.—The health ordinarily enjoyed by men of health, and the physical ability ordinarily possessed by men of sound bodies, made one "healthy" and "able-bodied," within the meaning of Act (1797) § 1, relating to legal settlement, and this notwithstanding casual and temporary illness, or bodily unsoundness producing an occasional and temporary effect upon the man's capacity to gain a livelihood by his bodily exertions. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 200.

[c] Ordained ministers.—(1) Under a statute providing that every settled ordained minister of the Gospel shall be deemed to have acquired a legal settlement in the place wherein he is or may be settled as a minister. Rev. St. c 45 § 1 cl 7. (2) A minister who has once been regularly ordained in a particular town, and who is afterward settled in another town as a pastor, with the full character, rights, and duties of a pastor, although without a new ordination or ceremony of induction, and for a limited time only, gains a settlement in the latter town. Bellingham v. West Boylston, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 553. See Leicester v. Fitchburg, 7 Allen (Mass.) 90 (sufficiency of acts settling minister under rules and usage of baptist denomination).

[a] Reason for rule.—"It is not an admissible idea, that a tribe of Indians, of whom the legislature had assumed the guardianship, whose land or other property is taken into public custody, and even whose labor is disposed of, without consulting the inhabitants of the town within which they may dwell, should become chargeable to the town, in case of poverty, merely because they lived within its limits. There is always supposed to be a consideration, past or present, for the obligations of towns to rest upon, in the support of paupers. They have received some benefit from their property, or that of their ancestors, by taxation or otherwise; and they may dispose of them in service. But with respect to this tribe of Indians, the town of Canton could never have received a benefit in any way, having no right to tax their property or their polls, or to diminish the expense of supporting them by placing them out at service." Andover v. Canton, 13 Mass. 547, 554.

[b] Residence in town at time of incorporation.—(1) An alien who resides in a plantation at the time of incorporation gains no settlement thereby, that method being limited to citizens of towns of the United States. Thomaston v. Vinalhaven, 13 Me. 159; Knox v. Waldoborough, 3 Me. 455; Jefferson v. Litchfield, 1 Me. 196. (2) But in Vermont it has been held that a statute in force in 1822, relating to the acquisition of settlements in towns at the time of their organization, applied to unnaturalized foreigners as well as to citizens. Derby v. Salem, 30 Vt. 722.

89. See statutory provisions.

[a] In Maine (1) Rev. St. c 27 § 1 par VI, essentially the same as L. (1821) c 122, declaring that any person who has reached the age of twenty-one, and who shall thereafter reside in any town within the state

pte, providing that "any person" who shall take a bona fide lease of premises, etc., shall acquire a settlement,[89] has been held to include an alien as well as a naturalized or native citizen.[91] So a statute relating to the acquisition of a settlement by a soldier enlisted in the continental army has been held to include an enlisted alien;[92] and, having acquired a settlement under such statute, the alien could gain a settlement in any other town by commorancy.[93] Where a person who was born in Great Britain came into the United States as a soldier during the Revolutionary War and was made a prisoner of war, but was not confined, voluntarily continued his residence, after the war, in the state in which he had been a prisoner, he became a citizen of that state, and capable of acquiring a settlement therein.[94]

Persons coming directly from foreign port or place. In some jurisdictions the statutes have provided for the settlement of persons coming directly from Europe, or from some foreign port or place, in the town in which they first settle and reside.[95] Such statutes do not apply to persons who have acquired a legal settlement in the United States prior to complying with the conditions of the statute.[96] The term "foreign port or place" does not include a sister state,[97] and it has been held that the term "directly" requires that the person should not have passed through some other state.[98] On the other hand it has been held that merely landing in a sister state will not prevent a person from gaining a settlement under the statute, provided he landed with the intention of continuing his journey to the place of destination, and immediately did so.[99]

A naturalized alien can thereafter acquire a settlement by compliance with statutes relating to the acquisition of settlements by citizens.[1] But in the absence of statutory authority naturalization combined with prior residence does not confer a settlement upon an alien.[2]

Children of aliens, born in the United States, are, however, citizens of the United States, and as such may acquire settlements in their own right, after reaching majority.[3]

[§ 46] c. Citizens and Inhabitants of Same or Different States. Statutes generally prescribe conditions under which citizens and inhabitants removing from one place to another in the state,[4] or coming from another state,[5] may obtain settlements.

[§ 47] d. Persons Non Sui Juris Generally.[6] Although the statutes do not expressly provide that only persons sui juris shall acquire settlements in their own right, this has been held to be an implied provision, and persons non sui juris have ordinarily been held incapable of acquiring settlements in their own right.[7] This rule has generally been adhered to even where the statute, in providing who may acquire a settlement, uses the term "any infor five consecutive years without having received supplies or support as a pauper during that time, shall thereby gain a settlement in such town was held to embrace aliens as well as citizens. Augusta v. Waterville, 106 Me. 394, 76 A 707; Calais v. Marshfield, 30 Me. 511; Knox v. Waldoborough, 3 Me. 455. (2) An alien who had acquired a settlement pursuant to such statute before the going into effect of Rev. St. (1905) c 142 § 9, providing that the revised statutes are not to be construed to make any town liable for relief furnished to an alien or his family since such statutes went into effect, is not deprived of any benefits which he had acquired by the settlement. Augusta v. Waterville, supra.

[b] In Massachusetts (1) under St. (1868) c 328 § 1, providing that "hereafter" any person having the qualifications mentioned in Gen. St. c 69, § 1 shall be deemed to have thereby gained a settlement, although not a citizen of the state or any state, the word "hereafter" applies not only to the acquiring of a settlement, but also to the qualifications, and hence an alien does not acquire a settlement unless he had gained the specified qualifications before the passage of the act. Com. v. Sudbury, 106 Mass. 268. (2) But under St. (1871) c 379, amending St. (1868) c 328 § 1, an alien having the prescribed qualifications gains a settlement whether such qualifications were acquired before or after the enactment of the statute. Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242; Worcester v. Springfield, 127 Mass. 540.

[c] In England it has been held that a foreign pauper, although, as such, having no settlement before residence in a parish, can, under the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act (1876) § 34, acquire a status of irremovability and consequently a settlement by such residence. habitant"[8] or "all persons,"[9] although some courts have given a contrary construction to the latter term.[10] But it has been held that a person non sui juris may acquire a settlement through the ownership and occupation of a freehold,[11] and this rule has been applied to infants[12] and persons non compos mentis.[13]

[§ 48] e. Infants[14]—(1) In General. Infants, not being sui juris, but under the control of their parents and deriving their settlement from them,[15] have, as a general rule, and in the absence of any statute to the contrary,[16] been held incapable of acquiring a settlement in their own right prior to emancipation,[17] and this rule applies to illegitimate as well as to legitimate children.[18] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that infants may acquire settlements through the ownership and occupation of a freehold,[19] in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary;[20] and it has likewise been held that an infant comes within a statute providing for the acquisition of a settlement by military service.[21] Some authorities have also held that an infant may acquire a settlement by residence under a statute conferring such settlement on "any person or persons."[22]

[§ 49] (2) Emancipation.[23] It has generally been held that a minor who, while living with his parents, can have only a derivative settlement,[24] may, if emancipated, acquire a settlement in his own right under statutes providing for the acquisition of settlements by "all persons," "any resident," or "any person," etc., without any express disqualifications as regards minors.[25] Where, however, the statute expressly provides for the acquisition of settlements by "persons of age," in a particular mode, a minor, although emancipated, cannot acquire a settlement in such mode.[26] And the same is, of course, true with regard to statutes providing for the acquisition of a settlement by "any person having attained majority."[27]

27. Clay County v. Palo Alto County, 82 Iowa 626, 48 NW 1053.

What constitutes emancipation. Emancipation under the pauper laws is not to be presumed, although it may be implied from circumstances.[28] Emancipation exists when the minor contracts a new relation inconsistent with being a part of the family,[29] as by marriage.[30] In order to constitute emancipation the parents must absolutely renounce all care and control of the infant.[31] Mere residence of a minor apart from his parents is not emancipation,[32] nor is a minor emancipated by deserting his home or becoming a vagrant,[33] unless such act is assented to by the parent.[34] So it has been held that a minor bound out by a written indenture until twenty-one years of age is not thereby emancipated so as to be capable of acquiring a settlement.[35]

[§ 50] f. Insane Persons.[36] An insane person or idiot cannot acquire a settlement in any place by virtue of acts requiring his own volition.[37] Such a person is, however, capable of gaining a settlement by any mode not requiring any act of volition of his own.[38] Accordingly, it has been held in some jurisdictions, under statutes providing for the acquisition of a settlement by continuous residence in a particular place for a designated time,[39] that a person non compos mentis may acquire a settlement by such residence, unless excluded by the terms of the statute.[40] In such case it has been held that the act of fixing the residence of one who is non compos mentis may be done by the individual having the care of his person.[41] But where intention and power of choice are elements of the residence necessary to gain a settlement,[42] a person non compos mentis, being incapable of intention or choice, cannot acquire a settlement by that mode;[43] and on this theory it has been held that a person non compos mentis and not emancipated, although of full age, cannot acquire an independent settlement by residence,[44] but will follow the settlement of his father.[45]

Settlement by ownership of property.[46] In some jurisdictions it has been held that a person non compos mentis may acquire a settlement through the ownership and occupation of a freehold.[47]

Where insanity occurs after legal settlement is once commenced, it does not interrupt the gaining of a settlement.[48]

Degree of incapacity. When the question of the degree of the mental capacity of a pauper has arisen, it is held that, to disqualify a person from making a choice of a settlement, the mental derangement need not amount to complete madness.[49] If the mind is diseased to such an extent as to deprive the person of volition, free will, and power of choice, or deprive him of self-control as to matters involved in a choice of settlement, this is sufficient.[50] Incipient insanity does not incapacitate one from gaining a settlement,[51] nor is a person incapacitated by mere eccentricity,[52] or weakness of intellect not amounting to idiocy.[53] And the fact that a person has once been adjudged insane will not prevent him

[a] Thus a statute providing that "any person having attained majority, and residing in this state one year without being warned as hereinafter provided, gains a settlement in the county of his residence," and that "legitimate minor children follow and have the settlement of their father," a minor emancipated by agreement with his father, cannot by residence acquire an independent settlement. from gaining a settlement if he has mental capacity sufficient to choose his own residence, although he has not formally been declared restored to sanity.[54]

[§ 51] g. Slaves.[55] During the existence of slavery in this country, it was held that slaves could acquire no settlement in their own right,[56] and in the absence of statutory provisions;[57] but upon emancipation they became sui juris and could acquire a settlement.[58]

Wife of slave. Since a wife is not permitted to gain a settlement separate from that of her husband,[59] and a slave cannot acquire a settlement in his own right,[60] the wife of a slave does not acquire a settlement in her own right by residence on a plantation at the time of its incorporation.[61]

[§ 52] h. Married Women.[62] The settlement of a married woman is that of her husband if he has one within the state,[63] and she cannot as a general rule acquire a settlement in her own right,[64] even where the husband has none,[65] unless the statute so provides.[66] A statute providing that "any woman" of the age of twenty-one years who resides continuously in any place within the state for a certain length of time without receiving relief as a pauper shall thereby gain a settlement in such place[67] does not apply to married women;[68] and this is equally true of a statute providing that "any person" of full age having an estate of inheritance or freehold and living on the same for a designated period shall gain a settlement.[69] On the other hand it has been held that a married woman may acquire a settlement in her own right by the ownership of real estate, under a statute giving such right to "any person" of the age of twenty-one years having real estate.[70]

Construction of statutes giving married women right to acquire settlements. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide for the acquisition of a settlement by an unsettled married woman in her own right, through residence, provided she does not receive relief as a pauper during the period required to gain such settlement.[71] The purpose of such statutes was to change the law in regard to married women and place them on the same footing in respect of the acquisition of a settlement as widows and unmarried women.[72] A married woman who has a settlement derived from her father, although her husband has no settlement, is not "unsettled" within the meaning of such provision.[73] So it has been held that the words "married women who have not a settlement derived by marriage" refer to a marriage then existing, and not to a former marriage which has been dissolved by the death of the husband.[74]

If the marriage is void, the woman remains a feme sole so far as her right to acquire a settlement in her own right is concerned.[75]

[§ 53] i. Deserted and Divorced Women. It has been held that a married woman cannot acquire a settlement in her own right, even though she has been deserted by her husband,[76] in the absence of express or implied statutory authority.[77] A married woman divorced a mensa et thoro may acquire a set-

[a] Reason for rule.—"It is founded on the highest consideration of public policy and morality; it concerns the unity of the marriage relation, and is declared by Blackstone to prevail because the law will not permit the separation of husband and wife. 1 Bl. Com. 363. It cannot be inferred, without clear and express provision, that the Legislature intended that the rules regulating pauper settlements should under any circumstances effect the compulsory separation of man and wife and the breaking up of joint parental relations to their children. By the construction contended for by the plaintiff, the wife would gain a settlement in five years, irrespectively of the fact that at the end of that time the husband's settlement was elsewhere. She would then lose the settlement which up to the end of five years she would hold by virtue of her marriage, and acquire a new one by force of the statute. If both should fall in need of relief, that relief as furnished by law would compel the separation." Somerville v. Boston, 120 Mass. 574, 575.

[a] Effect of general statutes removing disabilities.—(1) In Pennsylvania it is held that the statute removing the general disabilities of married women in case of desertion or nonsupport by the husband confers on a married woman, whose husband has deserted or failed to support her, the power to acquire a pauper settlement in her own right. Parker City Overseers of Poor v. Du Bois Borough Overseers of Poor, 6 Pa. Cas. 591, 9 A 457; Loyalsock Tp. v. Johnsonburg Borough, 14 Pa. Co. 323; Woodward Tp. v. Lock Haven, 13 Pa. tlement in her own right.[78]

Remarriage of deserted wife. If a deserted wife remarries during the life of her husband, such marriage being illegal, she can acquire no settlement by residence under it.[79]

[§ 54] j. Widows and Spinsters. A widow may, upon complying with the requirements of the statute, acquire a settlement in her own right, just as any other person sui juris may,[80] and it is immaterial that she already had a derivative settlement from her deceased husband.[81]

Unmarried women are under no disability with regard to the acquisition of a settlement.[82]

[§ 55] 3. Mode of Acquiring[83]—a. In General. A settlement may be acquired under the pauper laws by ownership or interest in property,[84] payment of rent,[85] payment of duly assessed taxes,[86] service under a contract of hiring[87] or indenture of apprenticeship,[88] holding public office,[89] enlisting in military service,[90] or residing in a particular town or district for a designated time under various conditions prescribed by statute.[91] Failure to comply with any one of the provisions of the statutes relating to the mode of gaining a settlement prevents the acquisition of a settlement under that provision.[92]

[§ 56] b. Ownership or Interest in Property[93]—(1) In General. One of the modes of gaining a settlement prescribed by many of the statutes is the ownership or interest in property of specified value within the town, and occupation thereof, if real estate, for a designated period.[94] The person's ownership must continue for the statutory period, and if he disposes of the property before the expiration of that period he will not gain a settlement, although taxes are assessed on the property and paid by him for the full time.[95] Under a statute providing that a person having real estate of a specified value or personal estate of a specified value, in the town where he dwells, and paying all taxes assessed on him and his estate for a designated number of years shall gain a settlement in the town, the person must have the required amount of real estate during the whole of the time designated, or the required amount of personal estate during such time, and if he has the real estate only a part of the time and the personal estate during the rest of the time he does not acquire a settlement.[96] Where the statute does not require that the property shall be held for any length of time, it is sufficient if the holder possesses it in fee during the shortest conceivable period of time.[97]

[§ 57] (2) Interest or Title Necessary—(a) In General. Where the statute provides for the acquisition of a settlement through ownership of real estate, it is necessary that a freehold estate be owned,[98] and some statutes expressly require that the person have a freehold or estate of inheritance.[99] These statutes refer to such an estate as the party has a right to occupy, and not to an estate in expectancy, where there is a preceding estate of freehold in another.[1] Nor is occupancy by tenants at

Case, 4 Pa. Co. 499 (deserted wife may gain a settlement for herself by leasing real estate of the yearly value of ten dollars, dwelling on the same for a year, and paying the rent). (2) But the deserted wife must comply with the statutes providing for the acquisition of settlements. Kittanning Borough Poor Dist. v. Armstrong County, 17 Pa. Dist. 673, 34 Pa. Co. 221.

[b] Acts constituting desertion.—(1) A married woman who, on account of the misconduct of her husband, has been obliged to leave him, has in law been sent away by him, and has therefore been deserted by her husband within the meaning of a statute providing for the acquisition of a settlement by a deserted wife through residence. Eastbourne v. Croydon, [1910] 2 K. B. 16. (2) A married woman who has been deserted by her husband does not cease to be "deserted," within the meaning of the statute, by the fact that she has obtained a separation order under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act of 1895, as the desertion continues until the husband returns to cohabitation. Eastbourne v. Croydon, supra. (3) So where a husband orders his wife to leave his house because of her misconduct, and she does leave, and lives apart from him, there is a desertion by the husband within the statute allowing a deserted wife to acquire a settlement in her own right. Reg. v. Maidstone Union, 5 Q. B. D. 31 [dist Reg. v. Cookham Union, 9 Q. B. D. 522 (where the wife voluntarily left her husband and remained absent for six years, in the meantime leading a life of profligacy)]. See Southwark Union v. London Union, [1906] 2 K. B. 112 (a wife is deserted by her husband when she is, rightfully or wrongfully, sent away by him to live a separate existence).

[a] In Massachusetts (1) under a statute providing for the acquisition of a settlement by three years' ownership and occupation of a freehold in the town where the person dwells, such person must, to gain a settlement, dwell in the town during the same three years he holds real estate. (2) Under St. (1789) c 14, a settlement may be acquired by occupation of a freehold, although the person is warned to depart in the meantime, the occupancy of a freehold and the acquisition of a settlement by residence being independent methods of obtaining a settlement. Salem v. Andover, 3 Mass. 436.

[b] In New Hampshire, under a statute providing for the acquisition of a settlement by the ownership of real estate in the town where a person dwells and the payment of taxes duly assessed thereon, a settlement may be gained by a residence and ownership of real estate, although the owner may not have been taxed for the estate. Rochester v. Chester, 3 N. H. 349.

[c] In Pennsylvania a certificate of settlement from the town from which he removes is necessary, under the act of March 9, 1771, in order to enable a person to acquire a settlement by the purchase of a freehold and residence therein, and such settlement cannot be obtained by an uncertified pauper who refuses to give security. Forks v. Easton, 2 Whart. 405.

[d] In England it has been held that the statutory time required to gain a settlement by residing on property owned in the parish need not be continuous. Reg. v. Knaresborough, 16 Q. B. 446, 71 ECL 446, 117 Reprint 950.

will or sufferance sufficient to confer a settlement.[2] So a statute requiring property to be held by a person "in his own right" excludes all property to which the person has but a right of temporary possession, as in the case of property held by an executor, administrator, guardian, agent, bailee, trustee, or tenant.[3] The settlement does not depend upon the question whether the title is good against all persons; although it may be defeasible, it is good until defeated,[4] although a contrary rule obtains under some statutes.[5] The grantee in a deed from a married woman without her husband joining therein does not acquire settlement thereby;[6] nor can a settlement be established by a promise to give land to the pauper's wife in the township, to be a home for him, such promise never being carried out.[7]

Conditional estate. A grantee of a freehold on a condition precedent is not, prior to the performance of the condition, seized of the estate so as to enable him to acquire a settlement.[8]

Contract for purchase. It has been held that a person holding under a bond for title or contract for a conveyance upon payment of the purchase money is not possessed of a freehold so as to enable him to gain a settlement.[9] If, however, the vendee has paid the purchase money so as to be entitled to a decree for specific performance, he has such an equitable estate as will enable him to acquire a settlement.[10]

Fraudulent conveyance. The occupation of an estate of freehold by the grantor after a conveyance thereof which is fraudulent and void as against creditors is not sufficient to gain a settlement, although the grantor has a bond for reconveyance from the grantee.[11]

Effect of lease. The owner continues seized of a freehold so as to gain a settlement under a statute requiring ownership of a freehold, notwithstanding a lease thereof.[12]

Necessity of record title. In order to gain a settlement through the ownership of an estate in fee, a perfect title of record is not necessary,[13] and the want of record of the deed at the time of the occupation will not prevent the acquisition of a settlement.[14] So a title acquired by adverse possession is sufficient.[15] But where such title is relied on, the period of ownership under the pauper laws does not begin until the expiration of the time necessary to acquire title by adverse possession.[16]

The mere possession of land has been held to constitute prima facie evidence of the possessor's seizin thereof so as to enable him to acquire a settlement.[17]

[§ 58] (b) Trust Estate. It has been held that a person having an equitable estate of freehold, the legal title being held in trust for him, is possessed of a freehold or of real estate so as to enable him to acquire a settlement,[18] provided the estate is lawfully created.[19] It has been held, however, that a trust by mere implication, not arising by deed, nor established by any previous decree, is not sufficient to confer a settlement under a statute requiring seizin of a freehold estate.[20] Nor is a mere equitable right sufficient to confer a settlement; it must be an equitable estate actually vested.[21]

[§ 59] (c) Interest of Mortgagor. The interest of a mortgagor in an estate in fee is sufficient to confer a settlement on him,[22] as where a purchaser of a fee gives a mortgage back to secure a part, or even all, of the purchase money;[23] but after condition broken and possession taken by the mortgagee, the mortgagor is no longer considered as having a freehold estate, and does not acquire a settlement,[24] although he is in possession by permission of a lessee of the mortgagee,[25] or under a parol agreement which can be terminated at the mortgagee's pleasure.[26] Actual possession must, however, have been taken by the mortgagee.[27]

[§ 60] (d) Curtesy[28] and Dower[29] Interests. Where the statute does not require that a person shall be seized of a freehold in his own right, possession of a freehold estate as a tenant by the curtesy in the right of the possessor's wife is a sufficient interest to confer a right of settlement,[30] although possession by the husband as tenant by the curtesy initiate of land held by his wife to her sole and separate use is not sufficient.[31] Where a wife's property is dower in the lands of her first husband, she has no vested freehold estate therein at common law until dower has been assigned,[32] and hence, before assignment, her second husband cannot be seized of a freehold in her right so as to acquire a settlement.[33] So if the wife's estate is in remainder or reversion expectant upon an estate of freehold, the husband has no interest in such estate while the freehold is outstanding, which will enable him to acquire a settlement.[34] Where the statute requires the person to hold "in his own right," real estate held jure uxoris is not sufficient to confer a settlement.[35]

[§ 61] (3) Value of Estate. The value of the estate necessary to gain a settlement is fixed by statute.[36] In the absence of language in the statute requiring a different construction, this value will be estimated without regard to encumbrances.[37] Some statutes, however, expressly provide that the estate shall be of a particular value free of encumbrances.[38] A mortgage which has in fact been satisfied is not an encumbrance within the meaning of such a provision, although it has not been discharged of record.[39] Under a statute requiring the estate to be of a certain clear, yearly income, the words "clear, yearly income" mean income free from all charges on the estate,[40] not the sum actually received yearly by the owner of the estate, but the yearly value thereof as a rentable estate.[41] The clear yearly income is to be ascertained by deducting all expenses to which the estate might necessarily and legally be subjected.[42] The property must be valued as if it had been subjected to taxation, when the forbearance to tax it has been on account of the poverty of the occupant.[43] The assessors' valuation of the estate is not conclusive as to the value thereof.[44]

[§ 62] (4) Occupation. The possession of real estate required under the statutes is generally held to mean actual occupation.[45] The personal occupation of lands includes an occupation by others under the direction and control of the owner.[46] But it is otherwise if the lands are leased.[47] Nor is it sufficient for a pauper to dwell in the neighborhood or near to his estate; he must dwell upon it.[48] On the other hand it has been held that residence for the required time in a town or parish in which the person has an estate is sufficient whether he is in actual possession of the estate or not.[49]

[§ 63] c. Purchase of Real Estate; Payment of Consideration. In a few jurisdictions the statutes provide for the acquisition of a settlement by the "purchase" of real estate, and declare that no settlement shall be gained by any such purchase unless the consideration therefor shall amount to a designated sum, bona fide paid.[50] The word "purchase" implies that a title must be given.[51] But such title need not be a legal one; an equitable title is sufficient.[52] So a deed need not have been actually executed, if the contract is otherwise complete.[53] But the contract of purchase must be enforceable,[54] and a mere contract for purchase, without payment of the consideration,[55] or a payment of only a part thereof, without any provision for payment of, or offer to pay, the balance,[56] is insufficient. A settlement is not gained by purchase if nothing passes by the conveyance, as in case of mistake in description,[57] or when the person undertaking to make the conveyance has no power to do so.[58] The conveyance need not be made directly to the purchaser, but may be made to a third person in trust for him.[59]

Payment of consideration. The statutes contemplate only a money consideration, or its equivalent.[60] Payment of an amount less than that designated in the statute,[61] even though a mortgage is given by the purchaser for the balance of the price,[62] is insufficient. But the provision of the statute that a settlement shall be gained by one who shall purchase an estate of a designated value and shall have bona fide paid therefor is satisfied where land of a greater value is purchased, and an amount at least equal to that specified in the statute is paid, provided no lien on the land is created for the balance of the purchase money.[63] Where the consideration of the purchase is a quitclaim by the pauper of other lands, such other lands must actually be of the value designated in the statute, and the fact that they were supposed to be of that value when, in fact, they had no value, is insufficient to bring the purchase within the statute.[64] In estimating the amount of the consideration, interest paid is to be included.[65] The consideration need not be paid directly by the purchaser; payment by a third person for him, or payment with money borrowed from a third person, is sufficient.[66]

Evidence as to consideration. It may be shown by parol that the consideration expressed in the deed had not in fact been paid.[67] Parol evidence is also admissible to show that the full statutory amount had been paid, although a smaller sum was stated in the deed.[68]

[§ 64] d. Leasing Real Estate[69]—(1) In General. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that a person may acquire a settlement in a town by leasing or renting real estate or a tenement in such town, if the premises are of a specified yearly rental value, or the rent reserved or paid equals a designated amount, and the person occupies the premises and pays the rent for the period designated in the statute.[70] Under these statutes there must be an actual leasing or renting[71] of real estate or of a tenement,[72] so as to create the legal relation of

Reg. v. Belford, 3 B. & S. 662, 666, 113 ECL 662, 122 Reprint 248 (where the court said: "The consideration was the building a house that cost 85l., and therefore, unless to satisfy the statute nothing but a pecuniary consideration in the strict sense of the word will suffice, and money value is not enough, our judgment must be for the respondents. The decision which seems most in point is Wendron Parish v. Stithians Parish, 4 E. & B. 147, 82 ECL 147, 119 Reprint 57, which was in effect that, if the value of 30l. had there been paid for the purchase of the lease, the statute would apply, if not it would not; and, the only question appears to have been had there been a payment either pecuniary, or by what was equivalent to pecuniary, or was the consideration for the lease mere love and affection. It was taken for granted there that an equivalent to money would have sufficed; and may not the building the house in this case, at the expense of 85l., be fairly taken as an equivalent to that sum?").

landlord and tenant. But the lease need not be in writing,[73] nor for any fixed time,[74] as in the case of periodical tenancies from year to year, actually continued for the required time.[75] A tenement may consist of several separate and distinct parcels, hired at the same time,[76] or at different times,[77] and even from different landlords.[78] A settlement may be obtained by living in a house with the lessee and, by agreement with the latter, paying rent in an amount equal to that fixed by statute.[79] So the allowance of the use of a house and grounds, with other privileges, by a master to his servant, as a part of his wages, has been held to constitute a sufficient renting.[80]

Joint lease. A lease to joint lessees is sufficient, it seems, to enable them to acquire a settlement.[81]

Want of title in the lessor and his consequent inability to give a lease binding upon the true owners will not prevent the lessee from acquiring a settlement.[82]

Nature of rent reserved. To constitute a leasing under the statute it is not necessary that a money rent be reserved;[83] the rent may be made payable in labor or other services.[84]

The occupancy and cultivation of land on shares is a sufficient renting,[85] but the value of the landlord's share of the crops must, of course, equal the statutory requirement as to the yearly rental value.[86]

Evidence of tenancy. A tenancy may be implied from circumstances,[87] as by occupation and payment of rent.[88] Where a tenant holds under a written agreement, the tenancy cannot be proved by parol[89] unless, under the particular statute, the terms of the agreement are immaterial except as a test of value.[90]

[§ 65] (2) Value of Tenement or Amount of Rent. Under some of the English statutes the tenement taken by the lessee must be of a certain yearly value;[91] while under other English and American statutes the rent reserved or paid must be of a certain amount.[92] The rent of one year cannot be tacked to the rent of a former year so as to make the required amount.[93]

[§ 66] (3) Occupancy of Premises. Strict compliance with the statutory requirements as to residence and occupancy by the lessee is essential.[94]

[a] Computation of time.—A person who rents a market stall to which he has a right of access for two days in the week only, and uses the stall on those days for a period of nineteen weeks, occupies the stall for thirty-eight days only, although no other person has a right to use it during the nineteen weeks, and hence a settlement is not acquired under the statute requiring an occupancy for forty days. Rex v. Caversham, 4 B. & C. 683, 10 ECL 756.

[b] Subletting.—(1) Under an English statute providing for the acquisition of a settlement by renting a tenement, which shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling house or building, or of land, or of both, and that such building shall be "held," and the land "occupied," for one year, a person who rents and holds for the designated time a distinct and separate dwelling house acquires a settlement, although a part of such dwell-

The occupancy of premises under different hirings may be so connected as to make an occupancy for the statutory period.[95] But where a lessee occupies premises for less than the statutory period, and then occupies other premises without taking a lease or paying rent, his occupancy of the latter premises cannot be tacked to his occupancy of the former so as to make a continuous occupancy for the required time.[96] In computing the time of the lease and occupancy fractions of a day are to be disregarded.[97]

[§ 67] (4) Payment of Rent. The statutory requirement that rent shall be paid must be strictly complied with.[98] But it has been held that the entire rent reserved need not be paid, provided the amount paid equals the amount required by the statute;[99] nor need the rent be paid before the completion of the occupancy.[1] But payment of rent after the death of a pauper will not complete a settlement partially acquired in his lifetime.[2] So it has been held not to be necessary that the rent should have been paid by the lessee,[3] provided it was not paid with the fraudulent intention of fixing the pauper's settlement upon the town or parish,[4] and a payment by his surety has been sustained as sufficient.[5] But payment of rent by a trustee out of the produce of effects assigned to him by the tenant in trust for the payment of the rent is not a payment by the tenant.[6] As the rent need not be reserved in money,[7] so it need not be paid in money, but may be paid in labor or other services equivalent to money.[8] A settlement gained by compliance with the statutory provisions is not defeated by the fact that the whole rent is immediately returned to the landlord for future board which is furnished him.[9]

[§ 68] e. Taxation—(1) In General. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide as a mode of acquiring a settlement residence by a person in any place in the state, and payment of all duly assessed taxes on his poll or estate during the period prescribed by the statute.[10]

Nature and ownership of property. The word "estate" in such a statute does not import that the taxpayer must have a fee or freehold, but means any legal interest for which he may be taxed, whether consisting of real[11] or personal[12] property, excluding such estate as he may hold in trust, either as guardian, administrator, or otherwise.[13] Thus, if a property tax is assessed against the person whose settlement is in question, it is not necessary that the property should belong to such person,[14] or that the tax should have been paid by him on the property as his own.[15] One who has purchased and occupied land under a bond for title on payment of the price holds a "ratable estate . . . in his own right," within the meaning of those words as used in some statutes relating to the acquisition of a settlement.[16]

[§ 69] (2) Nature of Tax. When the statute does not specify the character of the tax to be paid, the question of settlement is not affected by the quantum or the species of the tax; the payment of any tax for poll or estate is sufficient.[17] Thus it has been held that the payment of a highway tax[18] or county tax[19] is sufficient, but that the payment of a United States tax is insufficient.[20]

[§ 70] (3) Levy and Assessment. The statutes have usually been construed to mean that the taxes must have been actually assessed against the estate of the person claiming a settlement, and that it is not sufficient that he had an estate liable to taxation in the town, and was able to pay taxes for that period of time,[21] and it has been held that the town authorities may omit to tax a resident for the particular purpose of preventing his gaining a settlement.[22] But where the person pays taxes duly assessed upon him, the failure of the authorities to assess against him other taxes which should have been assessed will not prevent his gaining a settlement under statutes requiring the payment of all taxes duly asssessed.[23]

Invalid and irregular assessments. If the assessment of the tax was so defective as to be absolutely void, its payment will not confer a settlement.[24] But the acquisition of a settlement will not be prevented after payment by a mere irregularity in the assessment,[25] or by the nonpayment of a particular tax illegally assessed.[26] The taxes must have been assessed against the person whose settlement is claimed by reason of its payment;[27] but it is immaterial that the person was taxed by the wrong name.[28]

[§ 71] (4) Payment.[29] Unless the statute provides otherwise,[30] in order to confer a settlement it is not alone sufficient that the taxes have been assessed, but they must also actually have been paid,[31] and it has been held that the rule is not altered by abatement of the tax,[32] or by neglect to enforce,[33] or failure to demand,[34] payment; nor will remission of payment by special vote of the town or by action of the selectmen operate as payment.[35] The full amount assessed must be paid; payment of a part only will not suffice,[36] even though the taxpayer is discharged from payment of the residue by a vote of the town.[37]

Medium of payment. Under some statutes payment in money is necessary;[38] under others payment in labor will suffice.[39] But a promissory note payable to a town for the amount of a tax will not constitute a payment of the tax so as to give to the maker a settlement in the town, even though the authorities expressly agreed to receive such note in payment.[40]

Time of payment. It is not necessary that the taxes be paid the year they are assessed,[41] although they must be paid before a settlement can be perfected.[42] A tender of payment at any time before the tax has been abated has been held to be equivalent to payment.[43] But after a tax has been abated it cannot be paid for the purpose of gaining a settlement.[44] A person is not prevented from gaining a settlement by paying his taxes for two years successively under the statute, although, without his knowledge or consent, and before paying the tax for the second year his name was entered on the poor books as a pauper.[45] It has also been held that a person may establish a settlement in a poor district by the payment of taxes after he has received relief from such district, if the taxes were not paid out of the money furnished him for relief.[46]

[§ 72] (5) Persons Making Payment. It is immaterial by whom the tax is paid, provided it is done at the instance of, or with the consent of, the person to be taxed,[47] and this has been held true when the payment was by a political candidate to qualify the person taxed as a voter.[48] On the other hand no settlement is gained unless the taxes are paid by, or in behalf of, the pauper,[49] and the unauthorized and unratified payment of such taxes by a third person will not entitle the person taxable to a settlement by reason thereof.[50]

[§ 73] f. Service—(1) In General. The statutes sometimes provide that a settlement may be gained in any poor district by any unmarried person, not having a child, who shall be bound or hired as a servant within such district, and shall continue in such service during one whole year,[51] or, as in England, declare that, if an unmarried person, not having a child, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be deemed a settlement therein.[52] The term "unmarried person" has been construed to include an emancipated minor child,[53] as in the case of a minor child who goes out to work because of the death or desertion of his parents,[54] and a married woman who has been deserted by her husband.[55] The word "child" is held to mean a legitimate child,[56] so that an unmarried woman having a bastard child may gain a settlement by hiring and service for one whole year.[57] It has also been held that if an unmarried person has no child that can be a burden on the district, town, or parish in consequence of the parent's acquiring settlement therein,[58] as where the child is emancipated,[59] the parent will be regarded as "not having a child," within the meaning of the statute.

Effect of residence elsewhere. The settlement is gained where the services are performed under a contract of hiring although the pauper may reside elsewhere.[60]

[§ 74] (2) Contract of Hiring. To obtain a legal settlement by service, there must be a contract of hiring, express or implied, which is binding on both parties.[61] Such contract need not be entire,[62] it being sufficient if there has been a continuous service for a whole year under one or more contracts,[63] although the rule is otherwise where the time prescribed by statute refers to the contract of hiring and not to the service.[64] So where the statute requires only the service, and not the contract, to be for a year, the contract of hiring may be for an indefinite time, or at will, if the service is continued for the prescribed time.[65]

Consideration. A money consideration is not necessary to support the contract of hiring, but any other valuable consideration,[66] such as board and clothing,[67] will suffice.

[§ 75] (3) The Service. The service must be by virtue of a hiring; service alone, without a hiring, will not give a settlement.[68] It is not necessary that the service be menial or rendered in performance of household duties.[69]

Length and continuity of service. There must be an actual, continuous service for the required time,[70] and the criterion for determining whether absence from service breaks its continuity and prevents its being a whole year's service as contemplated by the statute is whether, during the intervals of absence, the contract of hiring is continued.[71]

[§ 76] g. Apprenticeship[72]—(1) In General. In several jurisdictions, statutes, varying in phraseology, provide for the acquisition of settlements by apprentices. Some of these statutes declare that the apprentice shall gain a settlement in the town or poor district in which he shall serve for a designated time under the indentures or articles of apprenticeship, while others provide that a settlement shall be obtained by one who shall be bound as an apprentice and inhabit in any district or parish for a specified time in pursuance of the apprenticeship.[73] To enable an apprentice to gain a settlement it is not necessary that the master should be settled within the parish or town in which the apprentice serves.[74] Paupers bound out as apprentices by overseers of the poor or parish officers may acquire a settlement,[75] and such settlement will not be disturbed for the fraud of the master if there was no fraud on the part of the parish officers.[76]

[b] Prospective operation of statute.—A statute, providing that from and after its passage no settlement shall be acquired by being apprenticed in the sea service, etc., nor by

Residence of apprentice. Under a statute providing that, if any person shall be "bound as an apprentice and inhabit in any town or parish," such "binding and inhabiting" shall constitute a good settlement,[77] an apprentice's residence in a parish other than that of the master must be in the character of an apprentice and in furtherance of the object of apprenticeship,[78] and not merely for recreation or by way of indulgence on the part of the master.[79] On the other hand residence in a place other than that in which the master resides will confer a settlement if the apprentice resides there in his character of apprentice or performs services there which are connected with the apprenticeship,[80] as where the master affords no place for the apprentice to sleep, or appoints a place out of the parish where the services are performed.[81] Residence in a parish for the statutory period is sufficient, although not during any one year.[82]

[§ 77] (2) Indenture.[83] The statutes all require an indenture of apprenticeship,[84] as distinguished from a mere written contract of hire;[85] and while service under an indenture which is merely voidable will not prevent the acquisition of a settlement,[86] no settlement is gained where the indenture is void.[87]

Exemption clause. Where a pauper is bound out as an apprentice by a poor district and the indenture contains a clause whereby the master indemnifies the district against all costs for support during the term of apprenticeship, such indenture is insufficient to enable the apprentice to gain a settlement by service thereunder.[88]

[§ 78] (3) Service. Under statutes omitting the term "service," and declaring that the "binding and inhabiting" shall be adjudged a good settlement,[89] an apprentice duly indentured may gain a settlement without service under the indenture.[90] But where service is required, subjection to indenture without service under it is, of course, insufficient to confer a settlement.[91] The service required by the statute must be actual service under the indenture of apprenticeship.[92] An apprentice to gain a settlement must serve with his master for the period required by the statute, and if he absents himself and roves abroad he does not gain a settlement.[93]

Service under void indenture. Where the indenture is so defective as to be absolutely void, no settlement will be gained by service thereunder.[94]

any person now being such an apprentice in respect of such apprenticeship, is prospective, and a person who has resided in a parish and served an apprenticeship in the sea service for the requisite period acquires a settlement, although the statute became effective before the term of apprenticeship expired. Service under a parol agreement is insufficient.[95]

Service under voidable indenture. An apprentice may gain a settlement by service for the prescribed time under an indenture which is merely voidable,[96] although after such period and before the completion of the term he avoids it.[97]

Service under assigned indenture. Although a contract of apprenticeship is not assignable, in the absence of statutory authority, so as to bind the apprentice to a new service,[98] yet where an assignment has been made by the master, service with the assignee is sufficient to entitle the apprentice to a settlement.[99] The same is true where the apprentice serves the new master with the consent of his old master without any formal assignment of the indenture,[1] although the second master never knew of the apprenticeship, the service being in other respects a good service under the indenture.[2] The consent may be inferred from circumstances.[3] But in the absence of consent, whereby the new service may be attributable to apprenticeship, no settlement is conferred.[4] In other words there must be an assignment, express or implied.[5]

[§ 79] h. Holding Public Office. Some statutes provide that settlements may be gained by holding and serving in certain public offices for a specified time.[6] Actual service in the office and performance of the duties thereof are necessary to enable the person to gain a settlement; it is not enough that he was chosen to office.[7] When the statute requires service of one whole year in a given office to give a settlement, it means a political year, or from one election to another;[8] and hence if a person chosen to the office voluntarily removes from the town or parish, as the case may be, within the year, so as to render himself incapable of performing the duties of his office for a whole year, he gains no settlement.[9] On the same principle no settlement is gained by an officer who is compulsorily removed from the town and confined in prison so that he is not able to discharge the duties of the office.[10] But temporary incapacity to discharge the duties of the office, caused by sickness or absence, does not prevent the gaining of a settlement.[11] A statute providing merely that one who holds a given office in the town for two years shall have a settlement does not necessitate a holding of such office for two years in succession;[12] but it is essential to the acquisition of a settlement under such provision that the person shall have a continuous residence in the town from the time he first holds the office until the settlement has been acquired; and if he holds the office for two years, but with an interval between, and during that period resides out of town for any time, he acquires no settlement.[13]

[§ 80] i. Military Service—(1) Under Connecticut Statute. An early statute in Connecticut provided that any soldier in the continental army who should be credited to any town in the state as part of its quota should be considered as settled in such town,[14] and such statute was held to include an enlisted alien.[15]

[§ 81] (2) Under Massachusetts Statute—(a) In General. In Massachusetts the statute provides that any person who was duly enlisted and mustered into the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War, and duly assigned as a part of the quota of any city or town, and who served for not less than one year, shall be deemed to have acquired a settlement in such city or town.[16] Such statute has been held to include persons who were minors at the time of their enlistment,[17] and persons who were enlisted prior to the act of congress fixing the legal obligation of towns, etc., to supply their proportion of soldiers, and who under the provision of such act were eventually credited to the town.[18] The right to a settlement is not affected by the fact that the soldier was credited in excess of the proportion due from the town at the time of such credit.[19] The fact that a person was drafted into service instead of entering it as a volunteer,[20] or was enlisted and mustered under a false name,[21] will not prevent him from acquiring a settlement; and in the latter case his identity may be shown by parol.[22]

Residence of person enlisting. A settlement may be acquired under the statute, by reason of service in the navy as part of the quota of a town, although the person so serving was at the time of his enlistment a resident of another town.[23]

Length of service. Although the statute provides that the person for whom the settlement is claimed must have continued in the service for a term not less than one year,[24] yet the length of his service is immaterial if he died or was disabled by disease contracted while engaged in the service;[25] and it has been held that, when the soldier did not serve for a year, the burden was upon the parties alleging the settlement to show a discharge for such a cause.[26]

Willful deserters and persons not honorably discharged. No settlement under the act is acquired by willful deserters or persons leaving the service otherwise than by honorable discharge.[27] But absence without leave, unaccompanied by an intention not to return, is not a willful desertion.[28] And the fact that a person duly enlisted and mustered was discharged as illegally drafted, after having served the required time, will not deprive him of the benefit of the statute.[29] A certificate, in due form, from the proper officer, of an honorable discharge, is admissible,[30] and is conclusive evidence of the cause of discharge.[31] If the discharge paper does not show the cause of discharge it will be presumed to be an honorable discharge.[32]

Continuance of service after statutory period. Immediately upon service for the year a settlement is gained, although the service is continued.[33]

[§ 82] (b) Replacing Settlement by Acquiring Another. One who has acquired a military settlement under the statute can, like any other person, gain, in any of the modes prescribed by the ordinary law, a new settlement in another town or city, and thereby replace the military one.[34] So, too, a military settlement gained by a person in one town may be replaced by a military settlement gained by him in another town, although both settlements were acquired before the passage of the act.[35]

[§ 83] j. Residence[36]—(1) In General. The statutes generally provide for the acquisition of a settlement by a residence for a specified length of time within a town, parish, or poor district, and compliance with other statutory requirements,[37] and it is only by strict compliance with the statute that a settlement is acquired thereunder.[38] To acquire a settlement under such a provision it is not necessary that a person be a poor or dependent person at the time the settlement is acquired,[39] and the question as to where he became a poor person is immaterial.[40] Where the statute exempts from its provisions persons sent into a poor district for education, a person sent into the district under indenture to learn the art of husbandry is within the exemption.[41]

[§ 84] (2) Necessity of, in Connection with Payment of Taxes. Where the statute provides for the acquisition of a settlement by residence and payment of taxes, no settlement is gained by the payment of taxes during the prescribed period, without a continuous residence through the same term.[42] So it has been held that the residence must be within the actual limits of the town. If the person resides without the legal limits of the town he does not gain a settlement, although he pays taxes to the town.[43]

[§ 85] (3) Necessity of Obtaining Approbation of Town To Acquire Settlement Thereby. Under the earlier statutes of the New England states, no person coming to reside or dwell in a town could thereby gain a settlement without obtaining the approbation of the inhabitants of the town given at a general town meeting.[44] A person could not gain a settlement by an implied approbation by the town of his residing therein.[45]

[§ 86] (4) Nature and Requisites—(a) In General. The term "residence," within the meaning of the statutes relating to the acquisition of settlements by residence, means the same thing as "home," "abode," or "place of dwelling," "residing," in similar statutes, means "having a home" or "abode," etc.[46] The word "inhabitant," as used in some statutes, means the same as "resident."[47] The residence requisite to the gaining of a settlement in a poor district is a residence therein in one's own right.[48] The residence must be open and notorious,[49] and if a person conceals his presence in a town or district from the authorities, so that they cannot warn him out,[50] it is insufficient to confer a settlement.[51]

50. Preventing settlement by warning out see infra §§ 104–109.

51. Newbury v. Harvard, 6 Pick.

Such residence must also be of a fixed and permanent character as distinguished from transient or temporary.[52]

Physical presence. Ordinarily a residence cannot be initiated unless there is a physical presence of the person in the town or district,[53] concurrent with an intention to reside there;[54] for, as has been said, intention may prolong a residence during absence, but cannot anticipate one,[55] although it has been held that intention to reside in a particular place, accompanied by removal of the person's family to such place, may be sufficient to establish his residence there without his bodily presence.[56] But physical presence need not continue for any particular time in order to establish a residence.[57]

Control over place of abode. To constitute a residence in a particular place, the person need not have any general interest in, or control over, the dwelling or house in which he lives,[58] nor need he even have any regular place of abode.[59] But a person cannot become a member of another person's family so as to give him a residence unless he is voluntarily there with the consent of the one having control.[60]

Coerced habitation. The habitation or residence necessary to confer a legal settlement under the pauper laws must not be the result of legal coercion, but there must be liberty of choice whether to live there or elsewhere,[61] and such liberty of choice does not exist in the case of a person confined as a prisoner[62] or as a lunatic.[63]

A person while supported as a pauper cannot be considered as residing at the place where he is supported, nor can such place be considered his place of residence.[64]

Residence of married woman. Where a husband has no settlement in the state, although he has acquired a residence there, and the wife is capable under the statute of acquiring a settlement in her own right,[65] her residence follows that of the husband, and she acquires a settlement by such residence for the statutory period.[66]

[§ 87] (b) Animus Manendi. Physical presence in a town or poor district, while generally necessary to initiate a residence,[67] is not alone sufficient,[68] but to gain a residence it is necessary that the person should take up his habitation in the place with the intention of remaining,[69] or at least without any present intention of removing.[70] But a person

It was held that such person's residence at T began, constructively, when his family removed to that place, and that such removal was an act of notoriety sufficient to put the authorities of T on their guard, so that not having warned him out, that town will be considered as having adopted him as an inhabitant. who moves into a town or district with the intention of making it his fixed residence, for an indefinite time, and without any certain purpose of returning to his former place of abode, and resides there for the statutory period, gains a legal settlement,[71] and such settlement is not defeated by the fact that he may have contemplated leaving the place at some future time,[72] or that his intention to remain was to a certain extent contingent.[73] The animus manendi is the controlling element in determining whether a residence has been acquired,[74] and the existence of such intention is a question of fact.[75]

[§ 88] (c) Place of Residence. The residence must be on the actual territory within the legal limits of the poor district sought to be charged.[76] A residence on disputed territory, claimed by two towns, and over which both exercise jurisdiction, is gained in that town within whose true boundaries the territory resided on is ultimately found to be situated.[77] In some jurisdictions it has been held that a settlement is gained in a town by a residence within the limits over which it exercises actual and exclusive jurisdiction, although those limits are not, in fact, within its true boundaries,[78] and that settlement is not defeated, or in any wise affected, by the subsequent acquisition of rightful jurisdiction by such other town.[79]

Residence on lands ceded to the federal government by a state for navy yards, forts, arsenals, etc., will not enable a person to acquire a settlement.[80]

Where a line dividing a town from a city passes diagonally through a person's dwelling house, but that part of the structure most clearly connected with the primary purposes of a dwelling is in the town, his residence is in such town.[81]

[§ 89] (5) Determination. As to a person having a family, his residence is usually determined by the place where his family resides;[82] but, as to a single person whose business or employment calls him away from home a great part of the time, or who is from time to time living with his friends or connections, his residence is usually determined by inquiry as to the place where he has kept his clothes or what little property he may have possessed, and to which he resorts as his home when out of employment.[83]

[§ 90] (6) Duration and Continuity of Residence[84]—(a) Duration in General. The length of residence necessary to acquire a settlement is regulated by statute,[85] and unless the statute is strictly complied with in this respect no settlement is acquired.[86]

Tacking periods of residence. Where a person who had resided before division in a part of the old town which, on division, was incorporated into a new town continues his residence in the new town, the two terms are to be tacked in determining whether the person has resided for a sufficient time in the new town to gain a settlement therein,[87] although there is authority to the contrary.[88] But it has been held that the period of residence required cannot be made up by tacking the time of residence in an unincorporated territory to the time of residence after its incorporation.[89] The whole period of residence must be while the person is sui juris,[90] and if the person is a minor during a part of the required time he gains no settlement.[91] So it has been held that a wife's residence in a town during her husband's life cannot be tacked to her continued residence there after his death, so as to enable her to acquire a settlement.[92] But under some statutes it has been held that the period during which a wife lives with her husband may be counted as part of the time necessary for her to acquire a

[§ 91] (b) Continuity[94]—aa. In General. The residence for the required length of time must be continuous,[95] and many of the pauper statutes expressly so provide.[96] Separate periods of residence cannot be added together to make up the statutory time.[97] But where a residence has once been established by the concurrence of intention and personal presence, continuous personal presence thereafter is not essential to a continuous residence,[98] especially when he whose residence is in question has a family between whom and him mutual family relations are in full force.[99]

An intention to remove in the future, without an actual removal, will not break the continuity of the residence.[1]

[§ 92] bb. Absence Animo Revertendi.[2] The continuity of a residence within the contemplation of the pauper laws is not broken by a mere temporary absence with the intention of returning,[3] or without any definite intention of abandoning such residence,[4] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[5] Thus continuity is not broken by an absence while temporarily employed or while seeking employment,[6] or while serving a term of enlistment

Act (1795) § 1 provided that no person should be removed from the parish where he was inhabiting until he should have become actually chargeable to the parish. It was held that the fact that a person did not become chargeable in the parish in which he lived did not confer upon him the status of irremovability which, by reason of his being a sailor, his residence there, short of the statutory period, did not give him. in the army,[7] unless the statute so provides.[8] So where a person, living in a town in which he had not a settlement, removed to another town, by direction of the overseers of the poor, solely to prevent his gaining a settlement in the former town, and with the intention to return at the expiration of a few weeks, it was held that the continuity of his residence was not broken.[9]

Retention of dwelling place. In some jurisdictions it has been held that an absence may be animo revertendi, although during the person's absence he does not retain in the place any house over which he has legal control, or to which he may resort as a matter of right;[10] but in others the contrary has been held.[11]

Question of fact. The question whether animus revertendi exists is one of fact to be determined by the jury.[12]

[§ 93] cc. Absence Sine Animo Revertendi. The necessary continuity of residence is broken where there is an absence or removal without any intention of returning,[13] or with the intention not to return.[14]

Intent formed during absence. If a person leaves his place of residence, and while absent forms the intention of not returning, the continuity of his former residence is broken as much as if he had formed such intention at the time of removal.[15]

Necessity of acquiring new residence. It is not necessary, in order that a removal without intention of returning should break the continuity of the residence, that the person should have in fact acquired another residence,[16] it being possible for a person so to wander around as to lose a home, within the legal signification of the word "home," under the pauper statutes.[17]

Effect of actual return. Removal without any intention to return,[18] or with the intention not to return,[19] will break the continuity of residence, although the person does in fact return.

[§ 94] dd. Interruption by Imprisonment.[20] In some jurisdictions it has been held that imprisonment in a state prison under a conviction for a crime interrupts the continuity of residence essential to the prisoner's acquisition of a legal settlement by residence in a poor district,[21] while in other jurisdictions the rule obtains that such an imprisonment does not interrupt the continuity of the residence of a prisoner in a district where he had his home and was supporting his family when imprisoned,[22] especially where the evidence shows a purpose on his part to continue such residence and to return to it as soon as he is liberated.[23] Imprisonment upon a bailable criminal offense merely, in one district, has not the effect to make a break in the continuity of the residence of a man who has at the time a home and family in another district to which he intends to return when he regains his liberty.[24]

[§ 95] ee. Interruption by Commitment to Insane Asylum.[25] In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that the time any person shall be a patient in a hospital for the insane, except inhabitants of the town in which such hospital is situated, shall not be computed as part of the time required by law to gain a legal settlement.[26] Independently of

26. See statutory provisions.

[a] Construction of statute.—Where the statute provides that the time during which an insane person shall be supported by a poor district shall not be included in the period of residence necessary to change the settlement, the mere liability of the dis-statute, the continuity of residence is interrupted by a commitment to an asylum,[27] although there is authority to the contrary.[28]

[§ 96] 4. Incorporation, Division, and Annexation of Territory[29]—a. Incorporation. A rule of the common law, which has been expressly recognized by statute in some jurisdictions,[30] is that, where unincorporated territory is incorporated as a town, all persons sui juris residing in such territory at the time of the incorporation gain a settlement in the town by such act of incorporation.[31] The fact that a resident within the territory incorporated was settled at any other place does not affect his acquisition of a settlement within the territory incorporated.[32] The rule with regard to the acquisition of a settlement by residence within territory incorporated does not apply, it seems, to residents of unincorporated territory which is annexed to an existing district or town;[33] and it has been held that the incorporation of a district into a town, each of such corporations being liable for the support of its settled paupers, does not itself give a settlement to unsettled persons residing therein.[34]

To constitute a residence within the rule above stated,[35] the person must actually have a home or dwell within the territory,[36] and the mere fact that before the incorporation he had the intention to make his home within the territory incorporated, and did in fact afterward make it his home, cannot be considered as giving to him a residence therein.[37]

Unincorporated territory. A settlement cannot be acquired in unincorporated territory,[38] and a statute providing that persons living in places not incorporated, and needing relief, are under the care of the overseers of the adjacent town, does not give to such persons a legal settlement in such adjacent town.[39]

Paupers supported within the territory incorporated, by the town in which they were legally settled, do not acquire a settlement through the incorporation;[40] but the mere fact that the person whose settlement is in question had some time prior to the incorporation received pauper supplies does not show that he was a pauper at the time of incorporation so as to prevent him from acquiring a settlement.[41]

[§ 97] b. Division of Towns or Districts.[42] In some jurisdictions the rule has been stated as a principle of the common law that, upon the division of an existing town and the incorporation of a new town from a part thereof, persons who were settled within the original town are to be considered settled within the old or the new town, according to the place from which they derived their original settlement.[43] In other jurisdictions the rule ob-trict to pay in the first instance, with right of recovery against those ultimately chargeable, is not support by the district. Dexter v. Sangerville, 70 Me. 441 (holding further that, where the friends of such insane person, without filing the bond required by statute and in the first instance, pay all his expenses of commitment and support, and the poor district makes no payment, the time of commitment and stay at the hospital is to be included in the period of residence, in the district where the insane person had his home, necessary to change his settlement under the pauper law).

(2) Poor Removal Act (1876) § 34 provided for the acquisition of a settlement by three years' residence in any parish under such circumstances as would render the person irremovable. Act (1846) § 1 declared that no person should be removed from a parish in which he had resided for five years provided the time during which such person resided as "patient in a hospital," should be excluded in the computation of time. It was held that a home for girls discharged from a hospital as incurable on account of tuberculosis (other than tuberculosis of the lungs) which did not provide regular medical attendance or nursing for such incurable complaints, and in which the girls might remain for any length of time until employment suitable to their condition could be found for them, was not a "hospital;" nor was a girl residing in such a home a "patient in a hospital" within the meaning of the act of 1846. It is worthy of consideration, although perhaps it does not alter the principle, that the establishment of the opposite doctrine would offer some temptation to town officers to send doubtful cases to the hospital, to prevent the gaining of a settlement by a person likely to become a pauper").

tains, both at common law and by virtue of statutes expressly or impliedly following such rule, that the settlement of a person upon such division depends upon the place of his residence or home at the time the division was made, that is, he becomes settled in the old town or in the new town according to whether his place of residence at the time of the division was in the former or in the latter,[44] in the absence of a special statute providing for the determination of the settlement of residents of a particular town, upon its division, according to the place from which they derived their original settlement.[45] This rule has been applied in some jurisdictions to persons who were paupers at the time of the division,[46] but in others the rule has been held to apply only to bona fide residents,[47] and not to include a residence as an existing pauper supported by the town divided;[48] in such case the pauper's last place of residence as a self-supporting person determines his place of settlement.[49] When the last place of residence of the person whose settlement is in question is unknown, his settlement remains in the old town.[50]

Special statutes. When a special act dividing an existing town and incorporating from a part thereof a new town expressly provides how the settlement of its inhabitants as regards the old and the new towns shall be determined,[51] such provisions, of course, prevail over the general law upon the question;[52] but when such special provisions include only a particular class of persons of the old town, the general law prevails with regard to the settlement of persons not included in such class.[53]

Unsettled persons. Upon the division of an existing town and the incorporation of a new town from a part thereof, unsettled persons residing in the territory incorporated into the new town do not, by the mere incorporation, as in case of the incorporation of unincorporated territory, acquire a settlement in the new town.[54] But where the act of incorporation expressly provided that persons having a "residence" in the territory incorporated in the new town should be deemed to be settled therein, the term "residence" was held to include persons residing or dwelling in such territory, although they had no settlement in the old town.[55]

What constitutes division. It has been held that a division of a town takes place only when one or more towns are divided and a new town is created from a part thereof, thus making a distinction between annexation and division.[56] When part of an existing town is taken and annexed to another town and the incorporation of the former town is annulled as to the balance, this is a division.[57]

[a] In New Hampshire, however, a town was held to be divided with-

Agreements between towns. No agreement between two towns upon the separation of one from the other can affect the legal settlement of their inhabitants as fixed by the general statutes or the special act making the separation,[58] although a contract between the two towns for the support of particular paupers may be binding.[59]

Loss of settlement.[60] In England the rule was originally laid down that, where a parish was divided into two or more parishes, all settlements acquired in the parish before its division were thereby lost,[61] unless the statute provided otherwise.[62] But these cases have been expressly overruled.[63]

[§ 98] c. Annexation and Detachment.[64] It is a general rule that, upon the annexation of a part of the territory of one town to another, persons residing upon the territory annexed and having their settlement in the town from which such territory is taken, acquire settlements in the town to which the annexation is made,[65] and this rule has received statutory recognition in some jurisdictions.[66] Persons who have no settlement in the town from which the territory annexed to another is taken,[67] or who do not actually dwell and have their homes upon the territory set off at the time of its separation,[68] do not acquire a settlement in the town to which such territory is annexed. But in some jurisdictions it has been held that a person having his settlement at the time of annexation upon the territory annexed, although not residing thereon, acquires a settlement in the town to which such territory is annexed.[69] The settlement of persons residing on territory set off from one town and not incorporated into another is not changed by such dismemberment.[70]

Void proceedings. Where a person has resided on land in a township for the statutory period, the attempted annexation of the land to a borough by proceedings which were void for failure to comply with the statutory requirements will not affect such settlement.[71]

[§ 99] d. Effect on Persons Absent. Where a person has his usual home in unincorporated territory, he is to be considered as residing therein so as to acquire a settlement through its incorporation, although at the time of its incorporation he is absent therefrom, provided it is his intention to return,[72] and this is so, even though, after the incorporation, he abandons such intention.[73] It is otherwise, however, where he removed from the territory incorporated, prior to incorporation, without any intention of returning.[74] In the absence of statutory provisions fixing the settlements of persons absent at the time of the division of a town, or the annexation of a part thereof to another town, it has been held that one who had removed from the old town prior to the division or annexation retains his settlement in the old town, irrespective of where he resided within such town;[75] but other authorities have held that the settlement of such a person is fixed by the locus of his original settlement in the old town.[76]

Statutory provisions. In many jurisdictions it is provided by statute that persons who are absent from a town at the time of its division or the annexation of a part thereof to some other town shall have a settlement in that town wherein their last dwelling place or home shall happen to fall on division or annexation,[77] and the power of the legislain the meaning of the statute of Dec. 16, 1828, whenever any portion of it was separated from the rest, whether the severed portion was incorporated into a new town or annexed to an old one. Barnstead v. Alton, 32 N. H. 245.

ture to enact statutes of this character has been directly upheld.[78] Such a statute applies only to divisions of towns made after its passage.[79] The term "residence" or "resided" refers to the last place of dwelling or domicile, as distinguished from place of settlement.[80]

A special act as to pauper settlements will usually control a general statute fixing the settlements of persons absent from a town at the time of its division.[81]

[§ 100] 5. Preventing Settlement—a. Receiving Supplies—(1) In General. The statutes generally provide that no person shall acquire a settlement in his own right if, during the period necessary for such acquisition, he received relief as a pauper.[82] In the absence of a statute to such effect the receipt of pauper supplies does not, it seems, prevent the acquisition of a settlement.[83] The supplies need not be furnished by the town in which the pauper resides,[84] it being sufficient if they are furnished by the town in which the person is at the time settled,[85] or by the common-

[d] Particular statutes construed and applied.—(1) A person who by reason of nine years' absence is presumed to have died prior to the division of the town, a part of which is incorporated into a new town, cannot be considered as "absent at the time" of the division, within the meaning of Rev. St. c 23 § 1 cl 4; neither can he be considered as having his "home in the new town," within the last clause in that section. Rockland v. Morrill, 71 Me. 455. (2) The statute does not include a person who had before the division removed to and dwelt in another part of the town distinct from that part forming a part of the new town. Sutton v. "No matter how poor a man may be, so long as he is able to support himself and his family and not likely to become chargeable, he has the right to choose his own domicile or remove from one to another, and thus change his legal settlement. But as regards one who is a pauper and unable to support himself, and who calls on the State for aid and assistance to do so, the State has a right to say how he shall be supported and where, and can require him, while being thus supported at public expense, to stay in the place of his last legal settlement, and, if he attempts to go elsewhere, will remove him there." Home for Destitute v. Fayette County Almshouse, 72 Pa. Super. 491, 495.

[a] Construction of statutes.—(1) L. (1896) c 225 § 41, providing that no residence of any poor person "in any almshouse, while such person, or any member of his or her family is supported or relieved at the expense of any other town, city, county or state, shall operate to give such person a settlement in the town where such actual residence may be," is to be read with the disjunctive "or" after the word "almshouse," as was the case before the revision. Peo. v. Lyke, 159 N. Y. 149, 53 NE 802. (2) Such statute does not enable a poor person, who resides in a town or city for one year while supported or relieved at the expense of the county, to acquire a settlement in such town or city so that he ceases to be a county charge and becomes a charge upon such town or city. Peo. v. Lyke, supra. (3) The statute does not impliedly repeal Rev. St. tit 1 § 30, providing that no residence of a pauper in the county poorhouse or in any town, while supported at the expense of any other town or county, shall operate to give him a settlement in the town. Peo. v. Lyke, supra. Contra Matter of Connellan, 25 Misc. 592, 56 NYS 157. (4) It seems that under such statute it is not necessary that the place where a poor person is supported shall be a public building, or that it shall be but one place in order that residence there shall not operate to give such person a settlement, and where the overseer of the poor of a city administers relief to a poor person at the house where he then lives, such house is a place where the poor are supported at the public expense, and is an almshouse within the meaning of the statute. [b] Inmates of Soldiers' Home.—In Maine, under Rev. St. c 24 § 5 an inmate of a soldiers' home, or one receiving rations therefrom, can acquire a settlement so long as his connection with such home continues, even though the inmate had no settlement in the state when his connection with the home commenced. Winslow v. Pittsfield, 95 Me. 53, 49 A 46.

[c] In England (1) the provisions of Poor Removal Act (1846) § 1 as to the exclusion for all purposes in the computation of time under the section of any period, inter alia, during which a person is in receipt of relief, prevent a pauper who has acquired a status of irremovability under the section, and who is in receipt of relief, from losing that status by a change of residence so long as he continues to be in receipt of relief. Poplar Union v. West Ham Union, 94 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769 [foll Hartfield v. Rotherfield, 17 Q. B. 746, 79 ECL 746, 117 Reprint 1467]. (2) Where a child under the age of sixteen resides with his father in a parish under such circumstances that he would acquire a status of irremovability and, after a period of three years, a settlement in the parish, the mere fact that the father has during that period received poor law relief will not, in the absence of evidence that the child has shared in such relief, disqualify the child from acquiring a settlement in the parish. [a] In other words (1) a person who is chargeable to, and receiving aid as a pauper from, one district, cannot acquire a settlement in another district so long as that relation exists. (2) "To hold otherwise would create an intolerable condition, for by encouraging a pauper to remove into another district and surreptitiously assisting him therein for one year, a poor district could relieve itself of the burden imposed on it by law, and fasten it upon its neighbor, which would be without notice of the pauper's impoverished condition; and the effect upon the pauper would be even worse, for there would be an incentive to keep him constantly on the move." Home for Destitute v. Fayette County Almshouse, supra.

[b] In Connecticut (1) under Gen. St. § 2469, providing that no inhabitant of any town shall gain a settlement in any other town unless he shall have resided there four years continuously, and shall have maintained himself and family during the whole of such period "without becoming chargeable to such town," a person who removes from one town to another and resides in the latter town for the requisite time without subjecting the town to actual expense for the support of himself or family gains a settlement there, although during such time the town from which he removed had furnished him and his family with necessaries on several occasions. Plainville v. Southington, 80 Conn. 659, 69 A 1049. (2) Under earlier statutes providing for the acquisition of a settlement by an inhabitant of one town in another by residence in the latter for a prescribed period without becoming chargeable to such town or to the town liable for the support of such person or his family, a person re-wealth,[86] and the fact that the person receiving the supplies has no other settlement in the state is immaterial.[87] But the fact that a person receives supplies after he has resided in a town for the statutory period will not affect his settlement there.[88] The statute applies to supplies furnished to a person committed to an insane asylum,[89] or confined in jail under criminal process.[90]

Notice. In order to prevent the recipient of pauper supplies from acquiring a settlement, it is not necessary, in the absence of statute, where the supplies are furnished by the town or district in which the pauper is residing, that such town or district should give notice to the town or district in which the pauper is at the time settled.[91]

[§ 101] (2) To Whom Furnished. Supplies ordinarily are to be deemed furnished to a person when furnished to a member of his family whom he is under obligation to support.[92] But relief furnished to members of a person's family without his knowledge, and while he is able to support them, will not prevent him from gaining a settlement.[93] It has also been held that, where a statute provides for the acquisition of a settlement by an unsettled married woman, provided she does not receive pauper relief during the period required to gain such settlement,[94] a married woman does not receive relief as a pauper within the exception of the statute by reason of the fact that during such period she applies for, and receives from the overseers of the poor, money for the board of her child.[95] Under some statutes the term "family" is deemed to embrace all the persons whom it is the right of the head of the family to control and his duty to support.[96] Under other statutes those only can be considered as his family who continue under his care and protection.[97] The wife of a minor son is not a member of the family of the father within a statute requiring a person, during the term of residence required to gain a settlement, to support himself and family;[98] and it has been held that a stepfather is not prevented from gaining a settlement by receiving supplies for the support of his stepson.[99] If, while one person is a member of another's family, pauper supplies are furnished to the family generally, they will be considered as supplies furnished to such person, even though he be of full age and not subject to the control of any of the family.[1]

Support of member of family in asylum. In some jurisdictions it is held that a person may gain a new settlement in another town or district, notwithstanding his wife or child is receiving support in an insane asylum in the district of his former settlement.[2] So where the statute expressly provides that a person's inability to support a member of his family in a lunatic hospital or similar institution shall not render him a pauper, such person's inabilmoving from one town to another and residing in the latter place for the statutory period does not acquire a settlement if, during such time, relief was furnished to him or his family by the town where he resided or the town from which he removed. Plainville v. Southington, supra. See Ridgefield v. Fairfield, 73 Conn. 47, 46 A 245; Beacon Falls v. Seymour, 44 Conn. 210 (both holding that the words "without becoming chargeable to such town" mean "without subjecting the town to actual expense for their support").

ity to furnish such support will not prevent his acquisition of a settlement.[3] But a contrary rule obtains in the absence of such a statute.[4]

[§ 102] (3) What Constitutes—(a) In General. The actual receipt of pauper supplies is necessary to prevent the acquisition of a settlement;[5] and hence a mere application for relief does not have such effect;[6] but a pauper residing in a township will not gain a residence there where the overseers of another township to which he is legally chargeable wrongfully refuse to give him the relief to which he is entitled, so that he is forced to support himself by begging.[7] The relief must be furnished directly or indirectly by the town,[8] pursuant to its statutory obligation,[9] and the person receiving such relief must receive it as a pauper.[10] Supplies which have been furnished gratuitously or on the individual credit of the recipient thereof have no effect.[11] So supplies furnished by individuals as an act of charity,[12] or from a charitable organization supported by private subscriptions,[13] are not to be considered pauper supplies so as to affect the recipient's acquisition of a settlement. And the same is true where the supplies are furnished by an individual in such a manner as to impose no liability upon the town for reimbursement,[14] although the town does subsequently voluntarily reimburse such individual.[15]

Supplies furnished under contract duty. Where a town or poor district furnishes aid to a person in discharge of a duty assumed by it by way of contract, and not in discharge of the duty imposed upon it by statute for the support of the poor, such aid is not to be deemed pauper supplies so as to prevent the recipient from acquiring a settlement.[16]

Intent to prevent settlement. Where the person is in actual need of relief, the fact that the supplies are furnished with the intention of the officers thereby to prevent a settlement is immaterial.[17]

A promise to repay and the actual repayment do not change the nature of the relief,[18] unless the relief is furnished to the pauper on a pledge of sufficient property to secure a remuneration.[19]

Soldier relief. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide especially for the support of indigent or poor soldiers of the Civil War and their families, and further provide that the receipt of such relief shall not impose upon the recipient pauper disabilities;[20] and in such cases the receipt of aid will not prevent the acquisition of a settlement by the recipient,[21] unless the aid is given to relieve distress not occasioned by injuries sustained in the war.[22] It is otherwise, however, in the absence of express statutory provision.[23]

Character of supplies. "Pauper supplies," as the term is used with regard to disabilities arising from their receipt upon the recipient's acquisition of a settlement, are not restricted to edibles or clothing, but have been held to include a house and ground furnished to a pauper for a home.[24]

Question of law and fact. The question whether supplies constitute pauper supplies so as to prevent the recipient's acquisition of a settlement is a mixed question of law and fact.[25]

[§ 103] (b) Necessity for Relief, and Application to, and Determination by, Officers. To constitute pauper supplies the person receiving them must be in need of relief.[26] A town in which a person has been residing cannot, if he is not in need of relief, furnish supplies to him so as to prevent his acquiring a settlement, and the consequent loss of his settlement in another town,[27] although, on proof that supplies were furnished to the person, the burden is on the latter town to show that he was not standing in need of relief at the time.[28] But if the necessity for relief exists, it is not essential to show that the recipient applied for it, or that the party whose settlement is thereby affected should have assented to the furnishing of it by the town.[29]

Action by officers. To constitute pauper supplies, so as to break the continuity of a pauper's residence, there must be an adjudication by a majority of the board of overseers that the alleged pauper is in need of relief;[30] but it is sufficient if the act of an individual overseer in furnishing supplies is authorized or ratified by a majority of the board.[31]

[§ 104] b. Warning Out[32]—(1) In General. In some jurisdictions statutes have provided that, where persons come to reside in any town or poor district, the designated officers may serve upon them a warning to depart, and thereby prevent them from gaining a settlement by residence;[33] but in order that a warning out should have the effect of preventing an acquisition of a settlement, the provisions of the statute in regard to the matter must be strictly complied with.[34] The power to warn out new settlers in any town is not designed to operate as a general act of exclusion against all who may come within the bounds of any town to reside, but is placed in the hands of the selectmen to be exercised or not, in peculiar circumstances, according to their discretion;[35] and they have no right to delegate such discretion.[36]

[§ 105] (2) Who Must Be Warned Out. All persons who are capable of gaining a settlement in their own right must be warned out, in order to prevent them from acquiring a settlement,[37] but persons who are incapable of acquiring a settlement in their own right need not of course be warned out.[38] When a husband resides in a town together with his wife and children, it is sufficient to warn the husband to depart, since his wife and children take their settlement by derivation.[39] But after a child reaches majority he must be warned out, although prior thereto his father had been warned.[40] So a woman living with a man as his wife under a void marriage must be warned out, although warning has been given to the man and his family.[41]

[§ 106] (3) Form and Requisites. A warning to prevent a pauper from gaining a settlement in a town must follow strictly the statutory requirements.[42] Where the statute requires the warning to be given within a specified time after the commencement of the person's residence, the term of residence must be stated, either in the warrant[43] or in the officer's return.[44] The warning must, if the statute so requires, be signed by the designated officers,[45] and a warning signed by only one of two

[a] Rule applied.—(1) If supplies, furnished bona fide by overseers to a person destitute, are in fact used for the relief of his destitution, or are received for the purpose of such relief, his unwillingness to receive them as pauper supplies, or his protest against so regarding them, or his declaration that he shall not so regard them, cannot prevent them from being so regarded, and from drawing after them all of their legal consequences. Veazie v. Chester, 53 Me. 29. (2) But if, when supplies are furnished, the overseers distinctly agree that the supplies are not, and shall not be regarded as, pauper supplies, but as a gift or loan to one in need, whether to be returned in kind or paid for or not, and they are thus received, the party so receiving will not be legally affected thereby, nor will the town acquire any rights thereby in its relation to other towns. [a] Nature and object.—The process of warning individuals to leave town, in order to prevent their gaining a settlement, is analogous to the English practice of orders of removal by justices of the sessions. The design in both cases is to impose the burden of maintenance on the town or parish where the pauper has his legal settlement. The mode of warning out is merely a milder form of effecting this object. Jaffrey v. Mt. Vernon, 8 N. H. 436.

[a] Warrant held insufficient.—(1) A warrant which stated that the person had "lately come to reside" in the town was an insufficient specification of the length of the pauper's residence. Middleborough v. Plympton, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 489. (2) A warrant stating that the person had resided in the town "near one year" is insufficient. Meredith v. Exeter, 8 N. H. 136.

44. See infra § 107.

45. Jaffrey v. Mt. Vernon, 8 N. H. 436; Shrewsbury v. Mt. Holley, 2 Vt. 220.

[a] Sufficiency of signature.—A warning signed by the selectmen as selectmen simply, not adding the name of the town, was held sufficient where the name of the town suffioverseers is void.[46] Mere formal errors will not, however, invalidate a warning if the matter intended appear with sufficient certainty from the whole.[47] Unless expressly required by the statute, a warning need not be under the seal of the selectmen or signed by them.[48]

[§ 107] (4) Service and Return. The service of the warning must strictly conform to the statutory requirements,[49] and the officer's return must recite every material fact necessary to show a complete legal service.[50] Thus the return must show on what persons the process was served,[51] and recite the particular mode of service of the warning order.[52] The time of residence of a pauper in a town must be shown in the warrant,[53] or in the return.[54]

Amendment of return. The return cannot be amended after the expiration of the period required for acquisition of a settlement by the persons warned.[55]

Recording return. Failure to record the return of the officer in the clerk's office within the period designated by statute renders the warning order invalid.[56]

[§ 108] (5) Operation and Effect.[57] Where a person has been warned to leave a town, he cannot gain a settlement by any residence however long;[58] nor, it seems, by returning after a temporary absence too short to enable him to gain a settlement by residence elsewhere.[59] But if, after the warning, he left the town and returned after an absence sufficiently long to acquire a settlement elsewhere, a new warning is necessary to prevent a settlement,[60] unless the statute extends the effect of the warning to all subsequent, although distinct, periods of residence.[61]

[§ 109] (6) Evidence. The burden of proving the issuance, service, return, and recording of the warning order is upon the party claiming the benefit of such proceeding, and, if not shown by the party objecting to the settlement, it is presumed not to exist;[62] and, in the absence of all proof save that a warning order was issued, it is not to be presumed that the return was made in conformity with the provisions of the statute.[63] The best evidence of the return is a memorandum made by the clerk of the court of the time when the return was received, and where such memorandum is made it is conclusive evidence of such time;[64] but this is not the sole evidence.[65] It is not competent to show by parol evidence when the record of the return was made.[66]

[§ 110] E. Derivative Settlement—1. In General. It is the common-law rule that a person incapable of acquiring a settlement in his or her own right may gain a derivative settlement by reason of his or her relationship to another person having a legal settlement;[67] and this rule has been recognized as in force in the different states of the United States.[68] The doctrine is applicable to husband and wife,[69] children,[70] and slaves.[71]

[§ 111] 2. Husband and Wife[72]—a. General Rules—(1) Derivative Settlement of Wife. It is a well settled rule at common law that the wife takes, by derivation, the settlement of her husband,[73]

[a] Sufficiency of service.—(1) The warning must be served by the delivery of a true and attested copy thereof on the person or persons to be warned, with the officers' return, or by leaving such copy at the house of his or their usual abode with some person of sufficient discretion then resident therein. Castleton v. Waybridge, 46 Vt. 474; New-Haven v. Vergennes, 3 Vt. 89. (2) If there is no such person with whom a copy can be left, it may be left at the usual abode of the person to be warned in such manner that he will most probably receive it. The right of the officer to adopt this method of service depends upon his inability to serve it in either of the first two methods named. Castleton v. Weybridge, supra. (3) If the service is not personal it should be certified to have been on "one then residing" where the pauper did. Reading v. Rockingham, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 272. (4) Where a warning issues against a man and his wife, it is sufficient to serve it on the husband alone. Dummerston v. Jamaica, 5 Vt. 399; Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564. (5) Service on one of the name and town mentioned in a warning is prima facie sufficient in default of evidence of another person of the same name in the town. Dummerston v. Jamaica, supra.

thereby losing her maiden settlement;[74] and this rule has often been recognized by express statutory enactment.[75] The fact that the husband's settlement was by way of derivation from his parents does not prevent such settlement from becoming that of his wife.[76] So the settlement of the wife follows that of her husband acquired in his own right after the marriage,[77] and this is true, even where the wife is confined in a hospital for the insane,[78] although there is authority to the contrary.[79] And even if the settlement of the husband is acquired after he has deserted his wife, or she has deserted him, it will immediately, by derivation, become the settlement of the wife,[80] although under the provisions of some statutes a contrary rule obtains.[81]

Marriage solemnized without state. The wife takes the settlement of her husband irrespective of the place where the marriage was solemnized, whether within or without the state.[82]

Marriage of paupers. Unless the statute provides otherwise,[83] the fact that a married woman who is claimed to have acquired by marriage the settlement of her husband was a pauper at the time of the marriage does not prevent her from acquiring thereby her husband's settlement,[84] if she entered into the marriage contract without force, bribery, fraud, or undue influence on the part of the town to which she originally belonged.[85] On the other hand it has been held that, although the officers of the place in which the woman had her maiden settlement procured the marriage in order to change her settlement thereby, she will nevertheless acquire her husband's settlement,[86] unless the statute expressly provides that settlements shall not be changed by marriages so procured.[87]

[§ 112] (2) Derivative Settlement of Husband. A man having no settlement within the state, who marries a settled woman, does not acquire her settlement by derivation,[88] unless the statute so provides.[89]

[§ 113] b. Effect of Void Marriage. Where the marriage is void, the wife does not acquire any derivative settlement thereby.[90] But, although the marriage at the time of its solemnization was in-

[a] Thus, while Code § 2224 provides that the legal settlement of a wife who has not been abandoned is that of her husband, an insane wife committed to the asylum from one county and thereafter returned to that county for care does not, by reason of her husband's acquisition of a settlement in another county, acquire a settlement in the second county, so as to render it liable for her care; for, while in ordinary cases the settlement of a wife should follow that of the husband, the reason for the rule is absent where the wife is insane and the husband can acquire a settlement as a single man. valid by reason of the incapacity of the person performing it, the subsequent legalization of the marriage by the legislature will render it valid ab initio so far as regards derivative settlements depending thereon.[91]

Presumptions as to validity. In cases involving derivative settlements of married women, where there is proof of the performance of a marriage ceremony followed by cohabitation, a valid marriage is presumed without proof that the parties were capable of contracting a legal marriage and that all the requisite formalities with regard thereto were complied with;[92] but where it is shown that at the time of the ceremony in question the woman had been married, although her husband had deserted her, it will not be presumed, in order to sustain the second marriage, that the first husband is dead, when he is shown to have been alive within seven years prior to such ceremony.[93] Where a woman had a husband living at the time she married another man, there is no presumption of a second marriage ceremony with the latter, after the former husband had secured a divorce.[94]

[§ 114] 3. Parent and Child—a. General Rules. The general rule is that legitimate children have the settlement of their father, if he have any such within the state, until they gain one of their own.[95] This doctrine of derivative settlement applies, unless changed by statute, although the settlement of the father was acquired by derivation and not in his own right,[96] or by birth,[97] or although it was acquired in his own right after the birth of his child, provided before such acquisition the child had not been emancipated.[98] A child not emancipated follows the settlement of the father, although not residing in the father's family at the time he changes his place of settlement,[99] and the settlement of minor children born after the desertion of their mother by their father follows during their minority the settlement of the father.[1] It has been held that a settlement acquired by the father out of the state does not pass to the child so as to cause it to lose its settlement within the state.[2]

Posthumous children have a derivative settlement from their father in like manner as children born in his lifetime.[3]

Stepchildren do not take by derivation the settlement of their stepfather, although by antenuptial agreement the stepfather agrees to support such children and they live in his family.[4]

[§ 115] b. Children Born in Other States or Countries. A father's right of settlement in a state is transmitted to children born in another state so as to be available to the children on their coming to the state where the father has a settlement.[5] The same rule has been held to apply in respect of children born in a foreign country and brought during infancy to the state where the father had a settlement,[6] although in some jurisdictions it has been held that an alien born takes no right to a settlement by derivation, whether he comes to this country during or subsequent to his minority, and whether his parents return with him or not.[7] If the father, after his removal from the state, acquired a settlement in the state to which he removed, and thereby lost his settlement in the former state, his children do not, on their subsequent removal to the former state, take their father's former settlement therein.[8] So if, by the law of the place of his birth, the child acquires a settlement there by birth, it seems that he does not also acquire a derivative settlement in another state in which his parent is settled.[9]

[§ 116] c. Adopted Children. Under statutes providing in effect that an adopted child shall be free from all legal obligations to his natural parents, and shall be the child of the parent or parents by adoption as if born to them in lawful wedlock, etc.,[10] the settlement of such adopted child follows the settlement of his adopting parents,[11] and if the adopted child had a prior derivative settlement from his natural parent, it is lost or merged in the derivative settlement acquired from the adopting parents.[12]

[§ 117] d. Illegitimate Children.[13] The place of birth of an illegitimate child ordinarily fixes its legal settlement at common law.[14] But in some jurisdictions it has been held, independently of statute, that, if the mother of an illegitimate child at the time of its birth has a legal settlement elsewhere, the child takes such settlement,[15] and this rule in many jurisdictions is expressly or impliedly prescribed by statute.[16] Under statutes of this nature, as construed in some jurisdictions, the settlement of the mother at the time of the child's birth remains that of the child until he acquires one in his own right; and he does not by derivation take a settlement acquired by the mother after his birth,[17] especially where the new settlement of the mother is acquired by marriage.[18] But under the construction given to other statutes[19] and under the rule laid down in some jurisdictions, independently of statute,[20] it has been held that the settlement of the children changes with the settlement of the mother acquired in her own right; and this has also been held true, although the subsequent settlement of the mother is a derivative one acquired by marriage.[21]

Legitimation of child. Where illegitimate children are by statute rendered legitimate through the subsequent marriage of their parents,[22] a child so legitimated takes the settlement of his father in like manner as other legitimate children.[23] But it is otherwise, in the absence of a statute providing that the marriage of the parents shall render antenuptial children legitimate.[24]

[§ 118] e. Children Non Compos Mentis. The general rule is that a child non compos mentis who, after attaining majority, continues to live with, and is under the control of, and dependent on, the father follows the settlement of the father thereafter acquired;[25] and in some cases it has been held that the incompetent child will follow the settlement acquired by the father after the child has reached majority, even though he is not living with the father.[26] On the other hand it has been held that, where such person is not residing with, or supported by, his father, he does not follow a new settlement acquired by the father after he, the child, has attained his majority.[27] And one who becomes non compos mentis after becoming of age does not follow the settlement of his father subsequently acquired.[28]

Settlement of mother.[29] A child non compos mentis who lives with, and is supported by, the mother after the father's death takes the settlement of the mother.[30]

does not prevent the operation of the rule.[33] As a general rule a child is emancipated on attaining his majority,[34] and does not follow the settlement of his father thereafter acquired;[35] and it has been held that the mere fact that the child is living with his father does not change the rule,[36] especially where the child is married.[37] In other cases, however, a child who, after reaching majority, continues single and remains in his father's family under the father's control has been treated as unemancipated, so as to follow a settlement thereafter acquired by the father;[38] and this is especially the rule if the child is non compos mentis.[39]

[§ 120] g. Settlement of Mother—(1) In General. Where legitimate minor children have a settlement derived from their father, his settlement must ordinarily be theirs in his lifetime, and they cannot acquire that of their mother.[40] But if the father has no settlement, and the mother has one, the children of the marriage take the settlement of the mother,[41] although the mother's settlement was derived from her parents,[42] and although the children were born in a different town from that in which the mother had her settlement.[43]

Divorce of parents.[44] Where the parents of minor children are divorced, and the mother is given the exclusive custody and control of the children, they take the legal settlement of the mother,[45] and if she thereafter removes to and acquires a new settlement in another county, taking the children with her, they take the new settlement so acquired.[46] On the other hand it has been held that the divorce of the parents and the appointment of the mother as guardian of their minor child does not affect the settlement of the child derived from its father.[47]

[§ 121] (2) Acquired in Own Right after Death of Father.[48] It is a rule of general application that the settlement of a widow, acquired in her own right after the death of her husband, is, by the common law, communicated to her minor children,[49]

[b] Sufficiency of emancipation.— Emancipation, such as will effect a settlement under the pauper law, must be an absolute and entire surrender on the part of the parent of all right to the care and custody of the child, as well as to its earnings, with a renunciation of all duties arising from such a position. It leaves the child, so far as the parent is concerned, free to act upon its own responsibility, and in accordance with its own will and pleasure, with the same independence as though it were twenty-one years of age. even though such children had a derivative settlement from their father.[50] But under a statute providing that a child shall have and follow the settlement of his father, if he has one, until he, the child, gains another in his own right, and shall follow and have the settlement of the mother in case the father is unsettled, a derivative settlement of a child acquired from his father is not affected by the acquisition of a settlement by the mother in her own right after the father's death.[51] So if the child is emancipated, he does not take any subsequent settlement acquired by his widowed mother in her own right.[52] But the mere fact that a minor child has left the family of his mother after the father's death, and is not subject to the actual control of his parent, does not constitute an emancipation, so as to prevent him from deriving the mother's settlement.[53]

[§ 122] (3) Acquired Derivatively by Second Marriage. Where a child has acquired a derivative settlement from his father, such settlement does not, upon a second marriage of the mother, follow the settlement of the mother so gained;[54] and the same rule has been followed where the child had acquired no settlement from his father.[55] So a minor child having the settlement of his mother does not, at common law, lose it and acquire a new settlement gained by the mother by a second marriage,[56] and the fact that the child removed with his mother to the place of new settlement does not alter the rule.[57] Nor, at common law, is the settlement of a woman acquired by marriage communicated to her child by a former marriage, even where such child has no domicile in the state.[58] In a number of cases, however, under statutes providing that children shall have the settlement of their mother if their father was unsettled, it has been held that the children follow the settlement acquired by their mother by a second marriage when the father had no settlement in the state.[59]

Divorce of parents. Where an abandoned wife procures a divorce from her husband, with custody of her child, and afterward remarries, she can gain no new settlement for the child unless time enough has elapsed between the divorce and the second marriage to enable the wife to acquire a settlement in her own right.[60]

[§ 123] 4. Slaves.[61] Prior to the abolition of slavery in the United States, slaves followed the settlement of their masters.[62]

Children of slaves.[63] Where the parents were slaves, they were incapable of transmitting a derivative settlement to their children, although the children were born free.[64] Nor did such children derive any settlement from the master of their parents;[65] but were deemed to be settled at their place of birth,[66] except where settlements by birth were not recognized.[67]

St. c 27 § 1 cl 2, providing that legitimate children have the settlement of their father, if he has any in the state, and, if he has not, the settlement of their mother within it, etc., a minor's pauper settlement derived from a settlement acquired by her mother on remarriage followed that acquired by the mother in another town on a subsequent third marriage, the provision of § 3 that settlements acquired under existing laws remain until new ones are acquired not conflicting with this holding. General Rules. As a general rule a person's settlement is not lost except upon his acquisition of a new settlement.[69] But a pauper cannot have two settlements in the state at the same time,[70] and upon the acquisition of a new settlement a prior settlement is lost.[71] The settlement of a child derived from the father cannot be divested by any act of the father,[72] such as emancipating the child.[73] Nor will a woman, acquiring a settlement by marriage, lose it by becoming an inmate of a state sanitarium.[74]

Admissions, either by act or declarations of the town overseers of the poor, will not have the effect of changing the settlement of a pauper from one town to another.[75]

[§ 125] 2. Statutory Annulment or Change. The legislature has full power to abolish or change the settlements of paupers.[76] The general rule is that, where a settlement is lost by virtue of statutory enactment, a previous settlement, lost by reason of the acquisition of the new settlement, is not thereby revived.[77] Under this rule, where a person removes from the place in which he has a legal settlement to unincorporated territory which is subsequently incorporated, so as to give him a settlement there,[78] the repeal of the act of incorporation does not revive the settlement which such person had in the place from which he removes.[79]

Annulment of derivative settlement. A wife's settlement, lost upon acquiring that of her husband,[80] is not restored by a statute which deprives her of her husband's settlement.[81]

[§ 126] 3. Gaining Settlement in Another State. In some jurisdictions it has been held that a settlement is lost upon the acquisition of a new settlement in another state.[82] In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the acquisition of a settlement in another state does not affect a person's prior settlement, and upon his return to the state is to be deemed settled at the same place at which he was settled before his departure.[83] But a settlement lost by acquiring a new settlement in a district in the same state is not revived when such district becomes a separate state.[84]

Effect of disputed boundary line. A settlement may be gained in a town by residence on a part thereof which is within the actual jurisdiction of the state, although within the rightful jurisdiction of another state which afterward obtains the actual jurisdiction upon establishment of boundary lines.[85]

[§ 127] 4. Marriage.[86] A woman, upon marrying a man who has a settlement, and thereby acquiring that settlement,[87] loses absolutely her own former settlement.[88] But mere proof of a woman's marriage, without further proof of the settlement of her husband, will not be sufficient to show that she had lost her maiden settlement,[89] although it is not necessary to fix definitely the settlement of the husband.[90]

Husband unsettled. Where at the time of marriage the husband is unsettled and the wife is settled, the wife retains her maiden settlement until her husband acquires one which can devolve upon her by derivation,[91] and her settlement is not suspended during coverture.[92] Accordingly the wife may be removed to the place of her maiden settlement notwithstanding it involves a separation from her husband.[93] On the other hand it has been held that a marriage to a man not having a settlement, although it may not suspend the settlement of the wife, suspends during cohabitation the right of removing the wife to her former settlement and thus separating her from her husband.[94]

[§ 128] 5. Divorce. A settlement gained by marriage is not lost by divorce,[95] unless the divorce be for such cause as shows the marriage to be void ab initio.[96] And some authorities have held that a divorce, even when secured by the husband for fraud on the part of the wife whereby he was induced to enter into the marriage, does not affect the wife's settlement derived from the marriage.[97] If the husband has no settlement the wife is remitted to her maiden settlement on divorce.[98]

stead of the mother.[5] Such a statute has been held applicable to all cases where the suit is for supplies furnished after the statute was passed,[6] although it was not passed until after the marriage and the birth of the children.[7]

[§ 131] 8. Abandonment and Absence.[8] In some jurisdictions the statutes have provided that a settlement shall be lost by absence for a specified period of time.[9] Under such statutes it has been held that the loss of a husband's settlement by absence for the statutory period does not affect the derivative settlement which his wife has acquired by marriage;[10] and if, during the husband's absence from his place of settlement, the wife lives with him, such time cannot be counted to defeat her settlement.[11] So it has been held that a minor who has acquired a derivative settlement from the mother does not lose it by absence during minority.[12] Under some statutes a pauper and those deriving their settlement from him lose their right of settlement by living five years beyond the limits of the state without receiving pauper supplies from any source within the state;[13] and such statutes have been held to be within the legislative power.[14] A wife abandoned by her husband loses her settlement under a statute of this nature where the husband loses his by absence for the designated period.[15] But the settlement of a minor emancipated by his father after deriving a settlement through him is not affected by the statute.[16] Other statutes declare that a settlement is lost by continuous residence in another town for a year.[17]

Confinement in asylum. Absence of a pauper from his place of settlement while confined in a state insane asylum does not affect any change or loss of settlement.[18]

[§ 132] G. Evidence of Settlement[19]—1. Presumptions[20] and Burden of Proof.[21] In an action involving the settlement of a pauper the burden of proof, as in other civil cases,[22] is upon the party alleging that the pauper was settled in a particular town or district to prove such fact.[23] So the bur-

[a] In Massachusetts (1) St. (1898) c 425 § 2 providing that a person shall lose his settlement by absence from the state for ten years in succession, was held not retroactive. Lawrence v. Methuen, 187 Mass. 592, 73 NE 860. (2) The word "absence," as used in St. (1911) c 669 § 4 (Gen. L. c 116 § 5), declaring that a settlement shall be lost by five years' continuous absence from the place of settlement, has its usual and natural signification of physical absence, and, if a pauper fails to acquire a settlement elsewhere, that circumstance is immaterial. Lanesborough v. Ludlow, 250 Mass. 99, 145 NE 57. (3) Under the latter statute where a pauper left the town of his settlement in 1910, and went to live with a certain person in another town, under an agreement of the overseers of the first town to pay for his support, and this agreement continued until 1921, the settlement was lost by absence, under Gen. L. c 116 § 5, and the town into which he had moved cannot recover from the first town for support furnished. Lanesborough v. Ludlow, supra. (4) The time spent in a public institution of the state is not counted in computing the time for losing a settlement under such statute. Treasurer, etc., v. Boston, 255 Mass. 499, 152 NE 37. (5) A pauper who had a legal settlement in defendant city, sued by the inhabitants of a town for his support, and left it July 13, 1911, but returned to become an inmate of a public hospital in the city before five years had elapsed, did not lose his settlement in the city, under St. (1911) c 669 § 4, excepting from the five-year period of time during which a person is an inmate of any public hospital, etc. Needham v. Fitchburg, 237 Mass. 354, 129 NE 453.

[b] In Minnesota, under Gen. St. (1923) § 3161, a settlement is lost by a person's voluntary and uninterrupted absence from the state for one year with intent to abandon his residence in the state. Willmar v. Kandiyohi County, 167 Minn. 178, 208 NW 648; In re Leslie, 166 Minn. 180, 207 NW 323.

St. c 27 § 1 par 2, they take his settlement, which continues until they gain a new one after attaining full age notwithstanding paragraphs 4, 7, 8. Bangor v. Veazie, 111 Me. 371, 89 A 193.

17. See statutory provisions.

[a] In New York (1) L. (1897) c 203, providing that a person shall lose his settlement by his continued absence from the place of such settlement for one year, was held to do away with the legal fiction of a residence presumed to continue long after it has in fact ceased. Peo. v. Maynard, 160 N. Y. 453, 55 NE 9. (2) This statute was held to apply, although during such absence the person did not acquire a new settlement. Peo. v. Maynard, supra. (3) It was also held immaterial whether during that year the person was self-supporting or was aided in part by the town of his former residence. Peo. v. Maynard, supra; Matter of Hawks, 26 Misc. 359, 57 NYS 216; Onondaga v. Syracuse, 22 Misc. 265, 49 NYS 1116. (4) However continuous absence for the statutory period without proof of residence did not forfeit a settlement. Syracuse v. Onondaga County, 25 Misc. 371, 55 NYS 634; Onondaga v. Syracuse, supra. (5) Nor did the statute apply to a person residing in a county wherein each town supported its own poor, where he had been supported for many years in the town of his residence on the guaranty of the town of his settlement to repay the former town the amount expended for his support. Matter v. McCutcheon, 25 Misc. 650, 56 NYS 370. (6) But this statute was repealed by L. (1900) c 345, and was not embodied in the present Poor L. (1909) c 46. Onondaga County v. Amsterdam, 139 App. Div. 877, 124 NYS 558. (7) Under the later act a settlement in one town is not lost by absence therefrom for a time less than that required to gain a settlement in another town. Onondaga County v. Amsterdam, supra.

[b] In Wisconsin it has been held, that the "voluntary and uninterrupted" absence for a year by which a settlement may be lost does not include an absence during which the town in which the pauper is settled supports him in another place. den of proving the acquisition of a new settlement is upon the party alleging it,[24] since a settlement once acquired is presumed to continue until another is subsequently acquired,[25] and such party must show everything necessary to the acquisition thereof.[26] Proof of the marriage of a woman is not sufficient to create a presumption of change of settlement; it must also be shown that her husband had a settlement.[27]

Place of birth. The fact that a pauper was first known residing with his father in defendant town establishes no legal presumption that he was born there.[28]

Emancipation. In ascertaining the settlement of a pauper the presumption is that children under twenty-one years of age are unemancipated and that those above that age are emancipated, until the contrary appears.[29]

Payment of taxes. The burden of proving that the taxes were paid so as to confer a settlement[30] is upon the party alleging that a settlement was thereby gained.[31] But, in accordance with the general rule,[32] a presumption of payment arises after the lapse of twenty years,[33] although such presumption may be rebutted by showing inability to pay during that period.[34]

Furnishing supplies. Where the question of settlement arises between two towns, the burden of proving that a settlement was defeated by furnishing pauper supplies[35] is on the town claiming to have furnished such supplies.[36] The presumption is that the supplies were furnished in good faith,[37] and the burden is on the town alleging fraud and collusion to prove the same.[38]

Presumption as to residence. Where a residence is once shown, it will be presumed to have been continuous until the contrary is shown.[39]

[§ 133] 2. Admissibility[40]—a. As to Settlement Generally. The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence[41] apply where the question of a pauper's settlement is in issue.[42] Any competent evidence is admissible which tends to prove or disprove residence or other facts necessary to establish settlement.[43] But hearsay evidence, except as far as it involves a question of pedigree, is incompetent.[44] In regard to the residence of single per-

[b] Omission to tax.—(1) Evidence that a person possessed real estate and that the assessors omitted to tax him therefor is not admissible in proof of his having gained a settlement. Berlin v. Bolton, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 115. (2) Tax lists see infra § 135.

[c] Evidence that deed was given as security.—In determining whether a person had gained a settlement under a deed of land to him, parol evidence that the deed, although absolute in form, was intended as security for a debt was inadmissible. Reading v. Weston, 8 Conn. 117, 20 AmD 97.

44. Bernards Tp. v. Bedminster Tp., 74 N. J. L. 92, 64 A 960 (affidavit of person not a member of the sons without a permanent home or abiding place, but who go out to work or reside from time to time with their relatives or friends, the ascertainment of the place in which they store or keep their effects and to which they return when out of employment or when not visiting is very material.[45] Evidence of the habitation of a man's wife and family is evidence of the residence of the husband,[46] and the testimony of old inhabitants of a town that they had never known the pauper has been held to be admissible to show that he did not have a settlement in the town.[47] A person may testify as to his intention in taking up his habitation in a place.[48] But evidence of the general reputation or as to the reputed place of residence of a person has been held to be inadmissible.[49] Defendant town is not confined, like plaintiff, to a single proposition;[50] it need not prove that the pauper had a settlement in any particular town;[51] it may set up and support by testimony any number of propositions to establish alternatively a settlement in either of several towns, or in either of several modes of acquisition.[52] So it is permissible to prove by witnesses under what agreements of hire or employment, or terms as to time or as to board, a pauper entered the town, where the question is as to the nature of his residence there, and whether temporary or not,[53] provided the evidence so offered is not hearsay.[54]

Voting. The fact that the pauper has voted in a certain town is to be considered in determining whether he had his residence in the town.[55]

Furnishing support. The act of a town or poor district in supporting a pauper or paying bills incurred by other towns for his support is admissible as tending to show that the pauper's settlement was in the former town,[56] although there is authority to the contrary.[57]

[§ 134] b. Declarations and Admissions.[58] Under general rules[59] verbal declarations of a person, not constituting a part of the res gestæ, are not admissible to prove his residence or other facts necessary to establish his place of settlement.[60] But his declarations showing his intention as to residence, made under such circumstances as to explain, and to constitute a part of the res gestæ of, his acts in reference to his residence, are competent,[61] and such declarations have been held to be admissible, although the pauper is alive.[62]

Of officers. Admissions or declarations of town officers, not connected with any official act, are inadmissible in evidence against the town upon the question of a pauper's settlement,[63] although admissions of poor officers in the exercise of their powers in regard to the settlement of paupers have been admitted against their towns to prove the paupers' settlement.[64] So it has been held that the admissions of overseers of the poor in performing acts under the statute as public officers, and not as agents of the town, are not admissible against the town on the question of settlement.[65] And, a fortiori, an admission by poor law officers that a person had a settlement in the town, derived from an ancestor, is not admissible in an action against the town by another town for the support of a different pauper whose settlement was derived from the same ancestor.[66]

Place of birth. Declarations of a parent as to the place of birth of his child are not admissible after pauper's family, based on information and belief, was incompetent).

[a] Rule applied.—(1) In agreeing to pay the support of a poor person farmed out to a person in another town, overseers of poor did not act as agents of the town from which such person was removed, but as public officers, and their action cannot be regarded as admission as to the poor person's settlement. Lanesborough v. Ludlow, 250 Mass. 99, 145 NE 57. (2) Evidence that the overseers of defendant town had upon notice from another town removed and supported the pauper and paid the other town its expenses incurred was incompetent on the issue of settlement. South Scituate v. Stoughton, 145 Mass. 535, 14 NE 744.

the parent's death.[67] So declarations of a person to show his place of birth are inadmissible on the question of settlement arising after his death.[68]

[§ 135] c. Documentary Evidence.[69] To prove the fact of settlement, or of residence and its continuity as a basis of determining settlement, recitals in deeds,[70] wills,[71] or other instruments in writing,[72] are competent evidence. Town or parish books and records,[73] such as books, lists, and records showing the assessment and payment of taxes,[74] if such lists, etc., are valid,[75] are usually admissible. On the other hand it has been held that the assessors' records, showing the nonassessment of the person whose settlement is in question,[76] or showing that he was assessed, without showing payment of the tax assessed,[77] are not admissible.

Voting lists, unaccompanied by proof that a person whose name appears on the list actually voted, have been held inadmissible;[78] but a list on which the name of the voter is checked, indicating prima facie that he had voted, is admissible.[79] On the other hand it has been held that the register of votes in a town, showing that a person voted at an annual election held there, is not proper evidence of his settlement in such town.[80]

[§ 136] d. As to Change of Settlement. The question of a person's intent to change his residence is to be determined from the circumstances surrounding the person at the time of his removal, such as the character of his dwelling, his habits, early associations, disposition, etc.[81] Such person's acts,[82] or declarations accompanying his acts,[83] are admissible in evidence unless too remote.[84] But declarations not accompanying any act indicative of a design to change declarant's residence are not competent.[85] So his declarations after his return to his former place of residence are inadmissible to show his intention at the time of removal.[86] Nor is it competent to prove the pauper's declarations of his future hopes or expectations, not carried into execution.[87] The person may, of course, himself testify as to his intention,[88] including his intention

as to the future.[89]

[§ 137] 3. Weight and Sufficiency.[90] General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[91] are applicable in determining the settlement of paupers.[92] The fact of settlement may be proved by circumstantial evidence, as well as by direct evidence.[93] Proof that a person has resided for the statutory period in a town is prima facie sufficient to establish his settlement therein;[94] but if it is shown that such person is a married woman, it may be necessary to prove further that her husband resided in that town, or else that she was deserted by him.[95] And it has been held that proof that a person was residing in a certain town a few months before and a few months after its incorporation is not prima facie proof that he was residing there upon the day of its incorporation.[96] Mere residence of a married woman for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction in divorce proceedings brought by her is not sufficient to show that she had acquired a settlement in the district where the divorce was granted.[97] Evidence of the habitation of a man's wife and family, while evidence of the residence of the husband,[98] is not conclusive.[99] Where the settlement of a pauper is derived by descent from his father, evidence of his father's marriage is essential;[1] but where the descent is shown, slight evidence is sufficient in the first instance to establish the legitimacy.[2]

The acts and declarations of a pauper in making a change of residence are not conclusive on that point.[3] So voting[4] and taxation, acquiesced in, and affirmed by, the payment of the tax,[5] are not conclusive on the question of settlement.

Support by town. Support of a person as a pauper by a town is not conclusive on the question of settlement,[6] although evidence of such support is admissible.[7] Where a town attempts to prevent the legal effect of a residence, by proving that the person whose settlement is in question has received supplies as a pauper, it is not enough merely to show that supplies have been furnished by the officers of the town;[8] it must also appear that the person supplied, or his family, was in need of the relief furnished.[9]

Documentary evidence. Recitals in deeds, wills, and other written instruments, although admissible on the question of a pauper's settlement,[10] are not conclusive.[11] Nor is a recital of residence in a marriage record conclusive of the fact of residence.[12]

Settlement by birth. As before stated, a pauper's birthplace is prima facie evidence of his settlement, but this may be overcome by showing a different settlement derived from his parents or subsequently acquired by him in his own right.[13]

[§ 138] H. Removal of Paupers—1. Power of Removal Generally. In many jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide for proceedings by which a pauper who becomes a public charge, or is likely to become so, in a town or district, other than that in which he is legally settled, may be removed to the place of his settlement;[14] and such a provision has been held constitutional.[15] This power of removal, being a power given by statute, cannot be exercised in any cases except those especially authorized,[16] and, in determining the intent of the legislature, the

16. Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122.
[a] In Connecticut (1) it has been held that, in the absence of statutory general rule that statutes are to be construed as a whole[17] applies to statutes relating to the removal of paupers.[18] The fact that the town to which the removal of the pauper is sought has provided a place for his support and requested his return will not bar a proceeding by the town in which he resides to compel his removal.[19]

[§ 139] 2. Persons Removable[20]—a. In General. The question who are removable under the pauper acts is a matter of statutory regulation, and as every person should be permitted to take up his abode where his inclination directs, only those persons who fall within the provisions of the statute are subject to removal.[21]

Insanity of a pauper does not prevent his removal to the place of his settlement.[22]

[§ 140] b. Persons Chargeable or Likely To Become Chargeable—(1) Persons Chargeable. Where the statutes provide for the removal of persons who have become chargeable as paupers, to the place of their settlement,[23] it is necessary that they should be actually chargeable before their removal is authorized.[24] The fact that a town actually furnishes relief to a person has been held insufficient to prove that he is chargeable as a pauper, but there must be a legal obligation to furnish relief.[25] In some jurisdictions a previous order for relief has been held essential to an order of removal based on the ground that a person has become chargeable,[26] except in cases of emergency;[27] and the order for relief is conclusive evidence of the fact that the person had become chargeable,[28] unless such order was taken out, not at the instance of the pauper, nor in his behalf, but merely for the purpose of laying the foundation for obtaining a removal order;[29] but it is not necessary that the order for relief should have been applied for by the pauper himself, if it was applied for by some one in his behalf.[30]

Chargeability by reason of "sickness or accident." In England a statutory provision has prohibited warrants for the removal of "any person becoming chargeable in respect of relief made necessary by sickness or accident, unless the justices granting the warrant shall state in such warrant that they are satisfied that the sickness or accident will produce permanent disability."[31]

[§ 141] (2) Persons Likely To Become Chargeable. Some statutes provide for the removal of persons who are likely to become chargeable,[32] and when removal is sought on this ground no previous order for relief is necessary.[33] While the phrase "likely to become chargeable" is not restricted to persons who have actually become public charges,[34] the mere possibility that a person will become chargeable as a pauper is not sufficient to authorize his removal; there must be a prospect or strong authority, where a pauper in need of relief resides in another town than that in which he is legally settled, neither the officers of the town in which he resides nor the officers of the town in which he is legally settled, and who are by statute liable for his support, have authority to remove him to the town of his settlement. Backus v. Dudley, 3 Conn. 568 (which was an action of trespass by a pauper against officers who had forcibly removed him against his will). (2) But in a later case, while the want of power to remove paupers in the absence of statutory authority was recognized, it was held, under statutes providing that paupers could be removed for support to places designated by the selectmen of the town in which they were settled, and for the removal of paupers who became chargeable in another town than that in which they were settled to the town of their settlement, by proceedings before justices of the peace at the instance of the former town, that where a pauper becomes a public charge in a town other than that of his settlement the selectmen of the town of his settlement may, without legal process, remove him to their town for support. Harrison v. Gilbert, 71 Conn. 724, 43 A 190.

[b] In Illinois is has been held, under a statute providing that the town or county in which a pauper has his legal settlement shall be liable to reimburse another town in which the pauper resides for support furnished to him, on failure of the former town to remove the pauper after notice from the latter town, but failing to provide for any proceedings for such removal, that the officers of the town of the pauper's settlement have implied power by reason of its liability for his support to remove him to its territory for support. probability.[35] So a person cannot be considered as likely to become chargeable while he has the means of supporting himself, or persons liable for his support are able to furnish such support;[36] and this, it has been held, although relief has actually been furnished to him.[37] The likelihood that the pauper will become chargeable must be from one of the causes specified in the statute,[38] and must depend upon his condition at the time when the proceedings for removal are taken.[39]

[§ 142] (3) Freeholders. The statutes providing generally for the removal of persons chargeable, or likely to become chargeable,[40] do not authorize the removal of a person from his freehold estate, although the freeholder has not gained a settlement in the town or poor district in which his freehold is situated,[41] whether the freehold be a legal or equitable freehold;[42] and it has been held that this rule obtains, although the freeholder has actually applied for relief.[43] A tenant in dower has been held irremovable,[44] even though the dower has not been assigned.[45] On the other hand, it has been held that a tenant in dower which has not been assigned has not such an interest as will render her irremovable.[46] The status of irremovability does not attach on account of the ownership of other than a freehold estate.[47] And if the pauper does not live on his freehold it seems that he is removable.[48] It has also been held that a lunatic needing support may be removed to his place of settlement, although he has a reversionary estate in fee in the town where he resides.[49]

[§ 143] c. Persons Wrongfully Brought into Place. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that, where a poor person who has no settlement in the state and no relation chargeable with his support is brought from the county where he has resided or been supported into a county where he does not belong, he may be removed to the county from which he was brought.[50]

[§ 144] d. Transient or Casual Paupers.[51] In some jurisdictions an order for removal of a pauper can be made only when the pauper has come to reside in the town procuring such order, and cannot be made in the case of a transient or casual pauper.[52]

[§ 145] e. Individual Members of Families—(1) Husband and Wife. It has been held, on the ground of public policy, and as a principle of the common law, recognized by statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, that paupers cannot be removed where such removal would result in the separation of husband and wife,[53] and the fact that they consent to be separated has been held immaterial.[54] It follows that, where a family becomes a public charge or is likely to become so, and the husband is unsettled, the wife cannot be separated from him and removed to the place of her maiden settlement.[55] Nor can the wife be removed to the settlement of the husband without the removal of the husband also.[56] Similarly, the husband cannot be removed alone to his place of settlement and separated from his wife.[57] So if the husband has acquired a status of irremovability in a parish other than that of his legal settlement, such status also attaches to his wife and prevents her removal alone;[58] and where the wife has a status of irremovability, as by her ownership of a freehold,[59] such status attaches to the husband and he cannot be removed and separated from her.[60]

Contrary doctrine. In some jurisdictions the courts have refused to recognize any doctrine of public policy which forbids the removal of a wife to the place of her maiden settlement where the husband who is unsettled is unable to support her.[61]

Desertion by husband. Where the husband, if unsettled, has deserted his wife, she, together with her children, may be removed to the place of her maiden settlement,[62] or if the husband is settled, she may be removed to his place of settlement.[63] But there is no desertion within the above rules, where husband and wife live apart by mutual agreement,[64] or where the husband is confined in jail by legal process, the wife and family continuing their residence.[65]

Void marriage. Where the marriage is void, this principle of irremovability does not, of course, apply.[66]

[§ 146] (2) Parent and Child. A person of full age, although residing with his or her parents, may, of course, be removed to his or her place of settlement;[67] and this is true, although such person is non compos mentis.[68] So a minor child having a separate settlement from his parents, if he is not of such tender years or physical or mental condition as to require a parent's care, may be removed,[69] especially where he has been emancipated.[70] Where minor children reside with their parents and have their settlement in the same place, and the parents become chargeable, the children may be removed with the parents.[71]

Minors of tender age or incapacitated. Minor children whose tender age or physical or mental weakness make it necessary that they should have the care and control of their parents, making it improper that they should be separated, are irremovable from their parents.[72] A child of tender years or within the age of nurture requires a mother's care and cannot be separated from her;[73] hence, in case of the removal of the mother, such children should

Statutory provisions. Other cases involving the removability of children and depending upon the construction of particular English statutes are collected in the note below.[77]

[§ 147] f. Status of Irremovability Acquired by Residence.[78] In England it has been provided by statute[79] that by a residence in a parish for a specified length of time a pauper acquires a status of irremovability, although such residence does not confer on him a settlement in the parish.[80] Under such statutes, it is not necessary that the residence of the pauper should be in a house appropriated to human habitation.[81] Where the continuity of the residence is broken, the status of irremovability is lost,[82] and where a husband who has acquired by residence a status of irremovability breaks his residence, his wife does not remain irremovable.[83] But a mere temporary absence animo revertendi does not break the continuity of the residence.[84] The acquisition of a status of irremovability by resi-

[a] Particular statutes construed.—(1) Under 11 & 12 Vict. c 111, a child over sixteen years of age residing with her father, and who has no settlement other than that derived from him at the time she became sixteen, cannot be removed to her place of settlement if the father is not removable. Mitford, etc., Union v. Wayland Union, 25 Q. B. D. 164. (2) The object of the statute was to prevent the separation of parent and child. Whether a child is removable depends upon whether the parent is removable. Reg. v. St. Olave's Union, L. R. 9 Q. B. 38. (3) Where a nineteen-year-old girl, unemancipated and having no settlement other than that of her mother, became chargeable after residing more than a year in respondent union, she was removable to her mother's place of settlement. Reg. v. St. Olave's Union, supra. (4) The fact that the guardians of a poor law union by whom a child is maintained have, acting under Poor Law Act (1899) § 1, passed a resolution by which all the rights and powers of the parent of such child become vested in them, does not, even where they have not rescinded the resolution, deprive them of the right to obtain an order for the removal of the child to the place of its last legal settlement. Wantage Union v. Bristol Union, [1907] 1 K. B. 68. (5) Under the provisos of Poor Removal Act (1846 and 1848) § 1 declaring that when any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable whenever she or he is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable, the word "children" includes both legitimate and illegitimate children. [b] Statutes construed and applied.—(1) Where a married woman who had resided in a parish for part of a year with her husband, a foreigner without a settlement, and, after the husband went abroad, intending to return, the wife continued to reside with her children in the parish for the remainder of the year, and afterward, during her husband's absence, became chargeable to the parish, she could not be removed therefrom under a statute providing that no person shall be removed from any parish in which such person shall have resided for one year previous to the application for removal. dence may be prevented by furnishing relief to the pauper during the period required to gain such status.[85]

[§ 148] 3. Place to Which Removable. The removal of a person who becomes or is likely to become chargeable as a pauper from a town or county not liable for his support must be to the place of his last legal settlement if he has one within the state.[86] If he has no legal settlement in the state, some statutes provide that he shall be removed to that town within the state in which he last resided continuously for a specified period of time,[87] while others provide that he shall be removed to the town where he first became chargeable.[88] Whether a pauper may be removed to his place of settlement in another state the authorities in the several jurisdictions differ, some holding that he may,[89] others holding that such a provision is nugatory for want of power by which the order can be enforced in the other state.[90]

Slaves. A manumitted slave who has not acquired a settlement elsewhere may be removed to the place where his former master resides.[91]

[§ 149] 4. Proceedings for Removal—a. Jurisdiction and Authority of Courts and Officers. The jurisdiction and authority to remove paupers to the place of their legal settlement is conferred entirely by statute,[92] and is confined to the court, board, or tribunal to which the jurisdiction is given;[93] and such statutes must be strictly followed.[94] Jurisdiction of such proceedings is conferred generally upon justices of the peace.[95]

Disqualification to act.[96] In some jurisdictions it has been held that a justice of the peace is disqualified by reason of interest to act in proceedings for the removal of a pauper from the town or parish in which the justice resides and is taxable for pauper support,[97] unless power to act is expressly conferred by statute.[98] In other jurisdictions it has been held that there is no such disqualification.[99] So where the statute expressly authorizes justices to act in proceedings for the removal of paupers from towns in which they are inhabitants; such provision

See cases supra this note (1). (3) Under Act April 6, 1905 (P. L. p 112), the court of quarter sessions has power to order the removal of a poor person to the district of his last legal settlement, although there has been no previous order of release or adjudication by two justices of the peace of the fact that the poor person is a pauper and chargeable to such district. L. p 115) was to provide alternate modes of obtaining orders of removal, one by petition to the court of quarter sessions, and the other by a proceeding before a single justice in the manner theretofore authorized by Act June 13, 1836 (P. L. p 539). Windham Tp. Poor Dist. v. Colley Tp. Poor Dist., 16 Pa. Dist. 384. [a] In New Jersey two methods of obtaining an order of removal are provided: First, before two justices of the peace; second, before a single justice. Where no application for relief has been made to the overseers of the poor by or on behalf of a pauper, the order for removal is made by two justices on the application of the overseer. But where the pauper, or some one on his behalf, applies to the overseer for relief, the proceedings for the order of removal must be before a single justice, and if the overseer proceeds before two justices, the proceedings are void. [b] In New York it has been held that two justices of the peace may order the removal of a pauper upon information obtained from any source or on suspicion. Rouse v. Moore, 18 Johns. 407; Shawangunk Overseers of Poor v. Mamakating Overseers of Poor, 1 Johns. 54.

[c] In Nova Scotia the statute contemplates that one justice of the peace shall take depositions as to settlement, and upon them, if a warrant or order for removal becomes necessary, it must be issued by two justices, of whom the one who took the depositions should be one. Pictou Dist. No. 7 Overseers of Poor v. Dist. No. 6 Overseers of Poor, 36 N. S. 326.

controls the general statutory provision prohibiting justices from taking cognizance of a cause or doing any judicial act in which they are interested.[1] An order for removal is not invalid because one of the justices who granted it is also one of the directors of the poor asylum to which the order is directed.[2] But it has been held that a justice who is also overseer of the poor cannot, in the same case, act in the double capacity of complainant and removing justice.[3]

[§ 150] b. Application for Removal and Proceedings Thereon.[4] Proceedings upon application for removal of paupers are regulated entirely by statute,[5] and a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute is necessary.[6]

Complaint or application. The usual mode of proceeding is by complaint or application of the overseer of the poor, or the officer exercising his functions, to one or more justices of the peace.[7] The complaint or application should allege all the facts that are material to be proved to effect the removal,[8] but such complaint may be amended.[9] There is no fatal variance between a complaint alleging that the pauper "is chargeable," and a finding of the justices that he "is likely to become chargeable."[10]

Notice to place to which pauper is to be removed. The requirement under some statutes that no order of removal shall be made without notice to the officers of the district to be affected[11] is jurisdictional.[12]

Notice to pauper. Where notice to the pauper of the removal proceedings is required,[13] failure to give such notice invalidates the proceedings,[14] although such failure cannot be taken advantage of by the town to which the removal is made.[15] In some jurisdictions it has been held that notice is required only when the ground of removal is that the pauper is likely to become chargeable to the town from which it is sought to remove him.[16]

Examination of pauper. When the statute requires the pauper to be examined in proceedings for his removal,[17] it is not necessary that the justices expressly state in their record that they examined the pauper.[18]

[§ 151] c. Judgment or Order and Warrant of Removal[19]—(1) Form and Requisites—(a) In General. An order for the removal of a pauper should show on its face that the officers making it acted within their authority, and that all the facts necessary to authorize it exist and were duly proved before the officers who made it.[20] In some jurisdictions it has been held unnecessary to insert in the order that it was adjudged that the person removed was likely to become chargeable to the town from

[a] Distinction discussed.—"When the overseers of P. township [the plaintiffs] made their complaint against W. [the poor person], alleging his liability to become chargeable, it was the duty of the justices to direct notice to him of the complaint, and upon such notice to inquire into and adjudicate upon the truth of the complaint. If W. had been a pauper he would not have been entitled to notice of the proceedings for his removal. The contest in that case would have been between the poor districts, in order to determine which of them should be held for the support of one who was a public burden. In that contest he could have no interest. Here, however, the proceeding was against one who was not a public burden. The complaint against him was that he was likely to become chargeable. He was the party against whom the proceeding was in the first instance directed, and it was his privilege to show that the complaint was unfounded." Gilpin Tp. Overseers v. Parks Tp. which he is removed,[21] but usually the order must show that there was a complaint and an adjudication that the person removed was likely to become chargeable,[22] and an adjudication of the place of last legal settlement.[23] It is not necessary that an examination should appear upon the order.[24] The order of removal must be certain as to the place to which the pauper is to be removed;[25] and where the pauper is to be sent out of the state, the order should designate the route by which he is to be transported.[26]

Including several persons in order. More than one person may be included in an order of removal,[27] although it has been held that several persons having independent settlements cannot be removed by the same order.[28] The order may include the members of a family, provided they have the same settlement,[29] or even, it has been held, where they have independent settlements.[30] The names of the different persons constituting the family need not be set forth.[31]

Age of pauper. It is not ordinarily necessary to set out the age of the pauper in the order of removal.[32] Where, however, children are removed with their father or mother because of the father's or mother's settlement, the order should set forth the ages of such children, to show that they could not themselves have gained any other settlement, unless the order contains an express adjudication as to the children's place of settlement.[33]

Warrant of removal. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide for a warrant of removal in addition to the order of removal.[34]

[§ 152] (b) Amendment. Defects in form in an order of removal may be amended,[35] but not defects in substance.[36] A defect apparent on the record and in no way affecting the jurisdiction or the merits of the case is a defect in form and not in substance.[37] The omission to state matter necessary to give jurisdiction is matter of substance.[38]

[§ 153] (2) Conclusiveness—(a) Order Unappealed from or Affirmed on Appeal. A valid order of removal of a pauper, unappealed from, is conclusive evidence of the settlement of the pauper,[39] and

[b] Sufficiency of order.—(1) An adjudication that a person is "the proper poor" of a town is tantamount to an adjudication that he has his lawful settlement in such town, and is sufficient. Shirley v. Lunenburg, 11 Mass. 379. (2) An order is sufficient which states that the justices cannot discover the last legal settlement of the pauper, but that he came last from a town named. as to all derivative settlements under him;[40] and an appeal which is ineffectual because the preliminary steps necessary to perfect the same have not been taken,[41] as where the appeal is taken after the time therefor has elapsed,[42] is equivalent to no appeal within the above rule. An order affirmed on appeal is likewise conclusive.[43]

Conclusiveness dependent on actual removal or notice. To give an order of removal conclusiveness, it must be executed, that is, the pauper must be actually removed, unless prevented by sickness or death;[44] or the order must be perfected by giving legal notice of the same,[45] although the order has been held conclusive even where no notice is served, where, after removal of the pauper, the order is not appealed from.[46] This notice cannot be waived, so as to affect the settlement of the pauper, by any agreement of the overseers of the town entitled to receive it.[47]

Persons and matters concluded. Not only is an unappealed or affirmed order of removal conclusive between the towns which are parties thereto,[48] but it is also conclusive against the appealing town in favor of all other towns,[49] and no other removal can be made except to a subsequently acquired settlement.[50] Furthermore such order is conclusive not only as to the facts directly decided, but also as to all facts necessary to uphold the order.[51]

[§ 154] (b) Order Discharged, Quashed, or Abandoned.[52] An order of removal discharged is conclusive between the parties litigant only;[53] while an order quashed is conclusive on neither party.[54] Where the overseers of the poor of a township in whose favor an order of removal has been made expressly and voluntarily abandon it, the order cannot afterward be enforced.[55] And where a town procuring an order of removal takes the pauper back, in consequence of which an appeal by the town to which removal is ordered is not prosecuted, the order is not conclusive that the pauper's settlement is in the latter town.[56]

[§ 155] d. Execution and Enforcement of Order or Warrant of Removal.[57] The execution of the order or warrant of removal is governed entirely by statute providing therefor,[58] and inasmuch as the proceedings are in large degree ex parte the terms of the statute must be strictly complied with to bind the town to which removal is sought.[59] Under the various statutes[60] the warrant or order of removal is usually executed by the constable or sheriff delivering the person of the pauper[61] to the overseer of the receiving town or county,[62] and serving the latter with the order or warrant[63] by leaving with him[64] a copy of the order or warrant of re-

[a] Physical transfer.—(1) Where actual removal of the pauper is impracticable, a constructive transfer from one district to the other by delivery of the order of removal is sufficient. Donegal Tp. Overseers v. Sugar Creek Tp. Overseers, 8 Pa. Cas. 9, 11 A 213; Tunkhannock v. Montrose, 3 LackJur (Pa.) 345. (2) Nor is physical transfer requisite to the validity of an order of removal and its binding force upon the town to which the removal is ordered. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146.

[b] A constable may execute the warrant in any part of the state in which he can find the paupers. Essex v. Milton, 3 Vt. 17.

[c] Time of removal.—Under a statute providing that the justices who make the order of removal shall specify the time within which the pauper shall remove himself to his place of settlement, and that, on his failure to obey the order, the justices may, by warrant directed to a constable, cause the pauper to be removed, it is no reason for quashing an order of removal that a warrant was issued by the justice and the pauper was removed with his own consent by the constable before the time for his removing himself named in the order had expired. Plymouth v. Mendon, 23 Vt. 451 [dist Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564 (where it did not appear that the removal of the pauper was with his consent)].

62. See case infra this note.

[a] Leaving the pauper at the house of a resident of the receiving district is sufficient, under the act of June 16, 1836, if delivery to the overseer is impracticable. Houston v. Jay, 9 Pa. Co. 412.

[a] Who may serve.—(1) In Vermont, under Rev. L. § 2835, providing that the order "may" be served by a sheriff or constable, no other person may serve it. Granville v. Hancock, 55 Vt. 323. (2) In New York it was held in an early case that an order of removal may be served by the pauper himself delivering it to the overseers of the town to which he is removed. Guilderland Overseers of Poor v. Knox Overseers of Poor, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 363.

64. See cases infra this note.

[a] Service by leaving a copy at the usual abode of the overseer with a person of sufficient discretion resident therein is good, under a Ver-

moval,[65] certified by the removing justice or justices.[66] Where the statute provides when a copy of the order shall be served on the overseer of the town to which the pauper is ordered to be removed,[67] such provisions must be complied with;[68] but, if the pauper is actually removed, failure to serve a copy of the order does not render the proceedings void, but merely voidable.[69]

Return and proof of service. The return of service of an order of removal should state every necessary fact to constitute legal service.[70] The return is prima facie evidence as between the parties as to the manner of service.[71] But the mere fact that the overseers of the receiving town found a copy of the order among the papers of their predecessors is not sufficient proof of service.[72]

Disqualification of constable. It is no objection to removal proceedings that the constable who served the removal order was also the overseer of the poor who made the complaint.[73]

Enforcement of order. It has been held that mandamus will lie to compel overseers of the poor to receive a pauper in compliance with an order of removal.[74] But other authorities have held that mandamus will not lie,[75] indictment being the proper remedy.[76]

[§ 156] e. Review[77] of Order of Removal—(1) Right of Review and Appellate Jurisdiction. The statutes of the various jurisdictions[78] determine the right to bring up for review orders of removal of paupers,[79] including questions as to the form of remedy[80] and the courts to which an appeal or writ of error may be taken.[81] Under statutes giving the mont statute, although the overseer never receives the copy nor any actual notice. Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146.

[b] Service on the clerk of the overseer is sufficient in Pennsylvania if the clerk afterward delivers the copy to the overseer. Houston v. Jay, 9 Pa. Co. 412.

65. See cases infra this note.

[a] Sufficiency of copy.—(1) The copy must correspond with the original order in every substantial part, and an omission in the copy which would be fatal if it was in the original makes the service bad. Dorset v. Rutland, 16 Vt. 419 (holding that leaving "a true and attested copy of the original complaint" is not compliance with the statute requiring service of a copy of the order of removal); Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564. (2) Such copy should state every fact essential to give jurisdiction to the justices making the order. Landgrove v. Plymouth, 52 Vt. 503; St. Johnsbury v. Morristown, 51 Vt. 316; Starksboro v. Huntington, 50 Vt. 599; Barnet v. Concord, supra.

[b] Statute making service unnecessary.—(1) Act (1864) No. 18 so altered the law in Vermont as to dispense with the necessity of serving a certified copy of the order, with order of notice appended, where the pauper is removed within thirty days of the making of the order. Landgrove v. Plymouth, 52 Vt. 503; Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 266. (2) But a certified copy of the warrant of removal, containing a recital of the record of the order, should be left with the overseer of the poor of the receiving town. Landgrove v. Plymouth, supra.

[c] Transmission of evidence.—In New Jersey, where an order is made for the removal of a pauper from one township to another in the same county, where no poorhouse is erected, it is not necessary to transmit and deliver with the order a copy of the evidence on which the adjudication was made. Knowlton v. Independence Tp., 9 N. J. L. 276.

[d] Manner of service.—In Vermont, under act of 1850 (Comp. St. p 132 § 13) the order of removal, with the notice required to be annexed thereto, should be served as an ordinary writ of summons is served. East Haven v. Derby, 38 Vt. 253.

Ireland Local Govt. Bd. v. Blackburn, [1909] 1 K. B. 454. [a] In Pennsylvania (1) under the act of June 13, 1836, appeals from orders of removal in pauper cases may be taken to the quarter sessions of the proper county. Bradford Tp. v. Goshen Tp., 57 Pa. 495; Mauch Chunk Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Nescopeck Tp. Overseers of Poor, 21 Pa. 46; Mifflin Tp. v. Elizabeth Tp., 18 Pa. 17; Franklin Tp. Poor Dist. v. Danville, etc., Poor Dist., 25 Pa. Super. 40; Lewisburg Overseers of Poor v. West Buffalo Overseers of Poor, 1 WklyNC 209. (2) No appeal on the merits will lie to the supreme court from the decision of the court of quarter sessions. Bradford Tp. v. Goshen Tp., supra; Mauch Chunk Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Nescopeck Tp. Overseers of Poor, supra; Mifflin Tp. v. Elizabeth Tp., supra; Lewisburg Overseers of Poor v. West Buffalo Overseers of Poor, supra. (3) The common-law jurisdiction of the supreme court to examine into the legality of the order on certiorari is not, however, taken away. Sunbury v. Dauphin, 1 AmLJ 77. (4) But under the act of March 16, 1868, either party at the hearing in the quarter sessions may except to any decision of the court upon any point of evidence or law, which exception shall then be noted and filed of record, and a writ of error may then be taken to the supreme court (Parker Tp.'s App., 1 Pa. Cas. 160, 1 A 716; Lewisburg v. West Buffalo, supra), (5) but where an order for the removal of a pauper has been made, and the district to which he has been removed does not appeal from such order, a writ of error will not lie to the subsequent order of the court of quarter sessions charging the district accepting such pauper with the costs of his previous maintenance (Perry County Directors of Poor v. Chillisquaque Tp. Overseers of Poor, 110 Pa. 153, 2 A 528; Luzerne County Poor Dist. v. Jenkins Tp. Poor Dist., 22 Pa. Super. 274; Green Tp. Poor Dist. v. Highland Tp. Poor Dist., 5 Pa. Super. 199; Lewisburg Overseers of Poor v. West Buffalo Overseers of Poor, supra).

[b] In England (1) on an appeal right of appeal to a party aggrieved,[82] a town receiving a pauper under a void order of removal has no right of appeal, having acted in its own wrong.[83] Nor is a town entitled to appeal under such a statute where the pauper dies after the order of removal and no steps are taken to collect from it the expenses incurred.[84]

Waiver of right to appeal. An appeal from an order of removal will not be set aside on the ground that it was entered by consent of appellant's attorney, where it appears that such consent was given for the purpose of bringing the question of law involved to a final and conclusive adjudication by the appellate court without unnecessary expense.[85]

[§ 157] (2) Proceedings for Transfer of Cause —(a) In General. Where no special mode is provided for appeal from orders of removal of paupers, it is held in some jurisdictions that such appeal may be made by notice to the town or county from which the removal is made and petition to the court to allow the appeal without previous declaration of appeal to the magistrate making the order.[86] In other jurisdictions all that is necessary is that notice of an intention to appeal be given to the justices, or one of them,[87] and if, after such notice, the justice refuses to certify the appeal, mandamus will lie.[88] Provisions as to notice of appeal must be strictly complied with.[89]

[§ 158] (b) Time for Taking Appeal. The time for taking an appeal from an order of removal is prescribed by statute.[90]

[§ 159] (3) Record on Appeal. The statutes provide for the record to be sent up on appeal from an order removing a pauper.[91] Where the statutory notice of removal proceedings was in fact given, although not appearing of record, the record may be amended to accord with the fact.[92]

[§ 160] (4) Scope and Extent of Review. The statutes[93] regulate the scope and extent of the review.[94] Failure of the order of removal to show that the justices gave the statutory notice to the overseers of the town to which the removal was or-against an order for the removal of a pauper, it is for the court of quarter sessions by which the appeal is actually heard to determine whether or not they are the next practicable sessions before which it could have been brought, and it is not a condition precedent to their jurisdiction to hear the appeal that it should previously have been entered and respited at a sessions by which it could have been heard. Rex v. Norfolk Justices, [1909] 1 K. B. 463. (2) An appeal lies to quarter sessions under Lunacy Act (1890) § 302 at the instance of the guardians of a union, from an order of justices adjudicating that a pauper lunatic has acquired a status of irremovability in that union. Eastbourne v. Croydon, [1910] 2 K. B. 16.

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) under Act June 13, 1836 § 19, the appeal must be to the next term of court after the order is made. Walker Tp. Overseers v. Perry County Poor Directors, 156 Pa. 426, 27 A 17; Cherry Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Marion Tp. Overseers of Poor, 96 Pa. 528; Sugar Creek v. Washington, 62 Pa. 479; Westmoreland County Directors of Poor v. Conemaugh Tp. Overseers, 34 Pa. 231; Bradford Tp. v. Keating Tp., 27 Pa. 275; Jenkins Tp. v. Paradise Tp., 8 Pa. Co. 164; Oxford Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Philadelphia Guardians of Poor, 2 Browne 253. See Lower Augusta Tp. v. Howard Tp., 6 Pa. Cas. 385, 9 A 446 [aff 1 Pa. Co. 373] (holding that, where an appeal is taken in time, the parties will not be allowed to suffer on account of a mistake of the court or the clerk). (2) This is the rule whether notice of the order was given or not. Sugar Creek v. Washington, 62 Pa. 479. (3) The statute refers to the time of entry of the appeal and not to the time of hearing it. Schuylkill County Poor Directors v. Northampton County Poor Directors, 17 Pa. Dist. 41. (4) Under Act April 6, 1905 (P. L. p 112), unless an appeal is taken within thirty days from the date of the order of removal, it will be quashed by the appellate court. Aylor's Case, 55 Pa. Super. 210.

[b] In Rhode Island, under Rev. St. c 346, an overseer of the town to which a pauper is removed, who shall think his town aggrieved by the order of removal, may appeal to the supreme court next to be held after twenty days from the delivery to him of the pauper, and this provision was not repealed by Rev. St. c 681, providing that a party aggrieved by a judgment of a town council, when the time within which an appeal may be claimed is not limited by law, may appeal within forty days next after the judgment is ordered. Paine v. North Providence, 9 R. I. 358.

[c] In Vermont (1) the appeal from an order of removal must be made to the term of the county court next to be held after a copy of such order is served as the statute requires. Braintree v. Westford, 17 Vt. 141; Dorset v. Rutland, 16 Vt. 419. (2) But if not so served, and the pauper is at any subsequent time actually removed by virtue of such order, the appeal is to be taken to the term of the county court next to be held after such removal. Westminster v. Warren, 55 Vt. 522; Dorset v. Rutland, supra. (3) If no copy of the order of removal is served on the overseers of the poor of the town to which the pauper is ordered to be removed, an appeal may be taken to the term of the county court next subsequent to the service of the warrant of removal. Landgrove v. Pawlet, 18 Vt. 325; Marshfield v. Calais, 16 Vt. 598. (4) But an appeal from a warrant of removal cannot be allowed where the order upon which the warrant was issued has been acquiesced in by neglecting to enter an appeal from it at the term required by statute, and it has thus become no longer open to litigation. Braintree v. Westford, 17 Vt. 141.

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) a certiorari to the quarter sessions in removal proceedings brings up to the supreme court nothing but the record. Plunkett's Creek Tp. v. Fairfield Tp., 58 Pa. 209; Bradford Tp. v. Goshen Tp., 57 Pa. 495. (2) Neither the evidence nor the opinion of the court constitutes any part of the record. Plunkett's Creek Tp. v. Fairfield Tp., supra; Bradford Tp. v. Goshen Tp., supra; Westmoreland County Directors of Poor v. Conemaugh Tp. Overseers, 34 Pa. 231; Mauch Chunk Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Nescopeck Tp. Overseers of Poor, 21 Pa. 46; Derry Overseers v. Brown, 13 Pa. 389.

[b] In Vermont neither the complaint nor a copy of it need be sent by the justices to the county court as a necessary paper in the proceedings of that court. Windham v. Chester, 45 Vt. 459.

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) under the act of March 16, 1868, on a writ of error the court cannot review the judgment of the court of quarter sessions on the merits, as on an appeal; only the decision on such points of law or of evidence as have been excepted to can be noticed. Cambria County v. Madison Tp., 138 Pa. 109, 20 A 944; Montoursville Borough v. Fairfield Tp., 112 Pa. 99, 3 A 862; Warsaw Tp. v. Knox Tp., 107 Pa. 301; Turbett Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Tuscarora Tp. Overseers of Poor, 72 Pa. Super. 597; Nicholson Tp. Poor Dist. v. Nicholson Borough Poor Dist., 33 Pa. Super. 358; East Franklin Tp. v. Raybum Tp., 23 Pa. Super. 522; Berks County Directors of Poor v. Schuylkill County Directors of Poor, 21 Pa. Super. 627. (2) A general exception to the decree and to the findings of fact and conclusions of law is insufficient to enable the supreme court to review the case on the merits. Huston Tp. Poor Dist. v. Benezette Tp. Poor Dist., 135 Pa. 393, 19 A 1060; Mifflin Tp. Poor Dist. v. Schuylkill County Poor Dist., 37 Pa. Super. 611; Shrewsbury Tp. Poor Dist. v. Penn Tp. Poor Dist., 33 Pa. Super. 378; East Franklin Tp. v. Raybum Tp., supra. (3) But when the omission of a point is supplied by the specific statement of the disputed question in the body of an exception, the record is then sufficient to present that question. Huston Tp. Poor Dist. v. Benezette Tp. Poor Dist., supra. (4) This act applies to the trial of the issues on the appeal. It has no reference to a motion made to the discretion of the court. Sugar Creek v. Washington, 62 Pa. 479 (holding that a writ of error will not bring up depositions taken below on the hearing of the rule to quash the appeal). (5) On certiorari to the court of quarter sessions, the revision of the supreme court is confined to the regularity of the proceedings, and does not extend to an examination of the merits. Shippen v. Gaines, 17 Pa. 38; South Huntingdon Overseers v. East Huntingdon Overseers, 7 Watts 527; Reading Overseers v. Cumree Overseers, 5 Binn. 81.

dered cannot be taken advantage of where the case is being tried on appeal upon the merits.[95]

[§ 161] (5) Hearing and Determination—(a) In General. While the time for hearing an appeal from an order of removal is usually provided for by statute,[96] such time is not so rigidly fixed as to deprive the parties of a reasonable time for procuring the evidence.[97]

Amendment of order of removal. A defective order of removal may be amended by the appellate court.[98]

Dismissal of appeal. Motions to dismiss the appeal reach such defects only as are apparent on the face of the record as it exists when the motion is filed.[99] Where the statute provides that, if seasonable notice of the appeal is not given, the appeal shall be continued to the next session of court, the court has no authority to dismiss the appeal for failure to give such notice.[1]

Effect of reversal. Where an order of removal is reversed, the justices of the town to which the pauper was improperly removed may make an order for his removal back to the town from which he was removed,[2] or, if it appears that the pauper has no settlement in that town, they may make a new original order for his removal to the place of his last legal settlement.[3]

[§ 162] (b) Discharging or Quashing Order of Removal.[4] An order of removal is discharged, or, as is sometimes said, vacated, after a successful objection to it on the merits.[5] It may be quashed for informality or irregularity of the proceedings,[6] but the fact that a pauper was removed, with his consent, before the time named in the order for his removing himself had expired, is not ground for quashing the order.[7] Where the proceedings before the justices were regular, and the appeal is taken in due season and form, the case is before the appellate court upon its merits, and an order quashing the order of removal is erroneous.[8] On the other hand, it has been held that the fact that the pauper in question is not liable to be removed may be taken advantage of on a motion to quash.[9]

Quashing in part. On appeal from an order of removal, the court may in part quash the order and in part affirm it.[10] So, where an order is made to remove several, and the order is bad as to part, either for some informality, or on the ground that they were not liable to be removed, the order as to them may be quashed and affirmed as to the residue.[11]

Time of quashing. A motion to quash an order of removal for jurisdictional defects may be made at any time.[12] It is sometimes provided that, on appeal from an order of removal, the order shall be no evidence of the facts therein stated; but respondents must begin de novo, and substantiate the order, before the appellants can be called upon to impeach it,[13] and under such a provision it is error for the appellate court to rule that the order is conclusive until impeached.[14]

[§ 163] f. Costs upon Removal Proceedings[15]—(1) In General. The right to, and items of, costs recoverable by the successful party in removal proceedings are dependent on the terms of the statutes.[16] And if at the time of trial the pauper has

[d] Failure to serve copy of order.—An omission of the justice ordering the removal of a pauper to cause a copy of such order to be served upon the overseers of the town to which the pauper is removed, as provided by Acts (1817) c 104 § 5, within thirty days, is a defect for which the pleadings may be quashed on motion or plea in abatement. Corinth Overseers of Poor v. Bradford Overseers of Poor, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 120.

[b] Place of residence.—On an appeal from an order of removal, the question whether the pauper had come to reside in the town procuring the order, within the meaning of the statute, may be presented by plea as well as by motion to quash. Sutton v. Cabot, 19 Vt. 522.

Bristol v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 203. See Newbury v. Brunswick, 2 Vt. 151, 19 AmD 703 (where the order for the removal of A B, a pauper, and his family, was abated as to the family for generality.

[a] The phrase "costs and expenses" in the act of June 13, 1836, to the party successful on appeal includes nothing beyond disbursements which are immediately connected with and incidental to removal, and does not include compensation paid to physicians who examined the pauper for the purpose of qualifying themselves to testify as to her mental condition. Perry Tp. Poor Dist. v. Red Bank Tp. Poor Dist., 8 Pa. Dist. 526.

[b] Liability of place of residence.—The poor district where a family had an established residence is liable for the expense of their removal from another district, where they have become a charge upon the community, even though they have been absent been removed, the action may still be prosecuted to recover costs and expenses.[17] In an action by the overseers of a town for the removal of a pauper they act as mere agents for the town, and costs, if recovered, must be taxed against the town they represent.[18]

[§ 164] (2) Counsel Fees. The statutes in many cases have been construed as authorizing the recovery of reasonable counsel fees by the successful party in removal proceedings.[19] But it has been held that counsel fees are allowable only where the losing party prosecuted the appeal vexatiously or frivolously;[20] and whether the appeal was taken with or without reasonable cause may, in the discretion of the court, affect the liberality of the allowance.[21] Counsel fees will not be allowed where the litigation might have been avoided by the allowance of proper credits.[22]

[§ 165] (3) Maintenance pending Removal.[23] A district not liable for the support of a pauper who becomes chargeable therein may recover from the town which is liable all necessary sums expended for his support pending his removal.[24] The relieving district must, however, employ due diligence in notifying the district liable for the pauper's support and in obtaining an order for his removal thereto,[25] and if it neglect to do so it cannot claim reimbursement for maintenance afforded during the delay.[26] Where there is negligence on the part of both towns in establishing legal settlement, the expenses of maintenance will be apportioned between them.[27] If the district liable refuses to accept the pauper, delay on the part of the relieving town in obtaining an order of removal will not prevent it from recov-from their home district more than three years. Westmoreland County Poor Dist's. App., 77 Pa. Super. 402.

[c] Necessity for appeal.—(1) The act of June 13, 1836, relating to costs in removal proceedings, allowed costs and charges only in cases where appeals were taken from orders of removal, and no provision was made for costs when the pauper was accepted and no appeal was taken. Blair County Directors of Poor v. Clarion Borough Overseers of Poor, 91 Pa. 431; Schuylkill v. Montour, 44 Pa. 484; Sugarloaf Tp. v. Schuylkill County, 44 Pa. 481; Lawrence Tp. v. Tioga County, 2 Pa. Dist. 786, 12 Pa. Co. 305. (2) The act of April 15, 1867, remedies the defect, however, and makes the accepting district liable for costs where the pauper is accepted and the order of removal is unappealed from, in like manner as if appeal had been taken. Blair County Directors of Poor v. Clarion Borough Overseers of Poor, supra [dist Renovo Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Half-Moon Overseers of Poor, 78 Pa. 301 (where the record did not show any acceptance of the pauper)]; Lawrence Tp. v. Tioga County, supra; Bedford County v. Licking Creek Tp., 2 Chest. Co. (Pa.) 310. (3) Where there is no appeal and the pauper is not accepted there can be no recovery for costs. Renovo Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Half-Moon Overseers of Poor, supra. (4) Where, however, the overseers of the place of settlement refuse to receive the pauper, and appeal from the order of removal, the appeal being quashed because not taken in time, the relieving district may file a bill of costs and expenses in the quarter sessions. Moreland Tp. v. Union Tp., 6 Pa. Co. 566.

[d] Necessity for order of removal.—There must be an order of removal in order to charge the accepting town, under the act of April 15, 1867, voluntary acceptance imposing no obligation for costs or charges prior to the actual time of receipt. Directors v. Overseers, 4 LancLRev (Pa.) 36. But see Clinton Tp. v. Union Tp., 5 Pa. Co. 124 (which holds that, where relief has been furnished in obedience to an order from two justices and costs have been incurred in searching for the last legal settlement of the pauper, the accepting town is liable for costs to a reasonable amount, under the act of April 15, 1867, although there was no formal order of removal).

[e] That the pauper was found insane and committed before removal will not relieve the accepting district of liability for costs. Bedford County v. Licking Creek Tp., 2 Chest. Co. (Pa.) 310.

[f] Order quashed.—(1) Where an order of removal was quashed by the general sessions, it was held that the court might allow costs. Newburgh Overseers of Poor v. Plattekill Overseers of Poor, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 330. (2) On affirmance by the supreme court of the order of quashal appellants are liable for the costs of the appeal. Newburgh Overseers of Poor v. Plattekill Overseers of Poor, supra. (3) But no costs are recoverable on affirmance unless payment thereof has been directed by the supreme court. Blooming Grove Overseers of Poor v. Minisink Overseers of Poor, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 588.

[g] Partial quashal.—Where on appeal an order of removal is in part confirmed and in part quashed, neither party is entitled to costs. Bucks County Directors of Poor v. Philadelphia Guardians of Poor, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 387.

[h] Want of jurisdiction.—Where an appeal from magistrates to the court of quarter sessions is quashed for want of jurisdiction in the magistrates, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to award costs to either party. St. Clair Tp. Overseers of Poor v. Moon Tp. Overseers of Poor, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 522.

[j] Services of a justice a town charge.—In New York the services of a justice in the examination and removal of a pauper are properly a town, not a county, charge. Ex p. Bennet, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 204.

[k] Sickness preventing removal.—In Vermont one town cannot recover of another the costs of removal of a pauper, except where the sickness of the pauper prevents a removal after an order is made. Londonderry v. Windham, 2 Vt. 149.

[l] Enforcement of payment of costs.—Where an order of removal from a township in one county is affirmed by the court of quarter sessions of that county, payment of costs may be enforced by mandamus to the overseers of the township to which the removal was ordered, on petition to the court of quarter sessions of the latter county. (2) There are other decisions, however, which hold that counsel fees are not to be allowed under such statute, and that costs must be limited to those which a party could win in any other successful litigation. Madison v. Cambria County Poor Directors, 9 Pa. Co. 435; Porter Tp. v. Jersey Shore, 6 Pa. Co. 569. (3) An allowance for attorney's fees cannot be made under Gen. Poor L. § 23. Carbondale Tp. Poor Dist. v. Scranton Poor Dist., 1 LackLegN 187. (4) Under Act April 6, 1905 (P. L. p 112), expressly limiting the recovery by a poor district, petitioning for removal of a pauper, to its expense of relief and removing, and the costs of the proceeding, it has been held that counsel fees cannot be allowed, since they are not a part of either "expense of removing" or "costs of the proceeding." Westmoreland County Poor Dist.'s App., 77 Pa. Super. 402. (5) In other cases, however, it has been held that under the act of 1905, reasonable counsel fees may be allowed as part of the expense of removal. Northmoreland Tp. Poor Dist. v. Exeter Tp. ering all expenses incurred up to the time of actual removal.[28] And refusal, on the part of the district liable, to receive the pauper after being served with an order of removal will render it liable for all expenses incurred up to the time of final acceptance.[29]

Where an order of removal is affirmed, the removing district is usually entitled to recover money expended for the support of the pauper from the date of the order of relief,[30] and, in necessitous cases, before that time.[31] Where a removal order is affirmed, and the pauper is too ill to be moved, the receiving district is liable for maintenance expenses subsequent to the obtaining of the order of removal.[32]

Where an order of removal is reversed or quashed, the district to which the removal is made is entitled under some statutes to recover from the removing district the necessary expenses of maintenance of the pauper incurred up to the determination of the appeal from the undue removal.[33]

Agreement as to costs. Where the parties to a pending appeal from an order of removal agreed that the suit should be discontinued, and that defendants should pay plaintiffs the "costs" which had accrued, it was held that this did not include the expense of maintaining the pauper after the order of removal was made, and while the pauper, because of illness, could not be removed.[34]

[§ 166] 5. Bringing Pauper into State, County, or Town[35]—a. Penalties[36]—(1) In General. In many jurisdictions there are statutes, variously worded, prescribing a penalty for illegally bringing an indigent person into the state or from one town or county within the state to another town or county therein.[37] To subject a person to the penalty, even where it is imposed in general terms, he must have acted with the motive or intent of imposing the expense of the pauper's support upon the town or district to which such pauper is brought.[38] In some jurisdictions it is held that a person does not incur the penalty by taking a pauper to the place of his settlement and leaving him there,[39] or by bringing a pauper settled in another state into the state in which he has his domicile, home, and usual place of abode, and from which he had departed temporarily.[40] Under other statutes the penalty may be recovered by the town or county into which the pauper is brought, although the pauper had his settlement in such town or county.[41]

An action for the penalty does not survive against the estate of the person bringing in a pauper.[42]

[§ 167] (2) Persons Liable. Statutes subjecting to a penalty "whoever" brings a pauper into any town, etc.,[43] are held to apply to public officers as well as to individuals.[44] Even at common law overseers of the poor were indictable for fraudulently removing paupers into a parish in which they had no settlement.[45]

[b] Expenses recoverable.—The receiving district may recover not only the cost of maintaining the pauper, but also the cost of maintaining her illegitimate infant child, removed with the mother, although such child was not named in the order. Lathrop Poor Dist. v. Nicholson Poor Dist., 13 Pa. Dist. 797.

[c] In New York it has been held that the overseers of the town to which a pauper is improperly removed cannot, after the order of removal is quashed, maintain an action against the overseers of the town from which he was removed, to recover the expenses of his maintenance, the presumption being that the order was obtained bona fide, and the statute not making it the duty of the overseers of the poor who had caused the pauper to be removed to another town to take him back at their own charge. Rouse v. Moore, 18 Johns. 407.

[d] In Vermont (1) towns may recover for money paid to other towns for the support of paupers, upon orders of removal afterward reversed, if the amount does not exceed the expense of keeping in the town procuring the removal. St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692. (2) But where the court on appeal from an order of removal decided that the pauper was unduly removed because he had not gone to reside in the removing town, but was a transient there, and that such town was therefore entitled to recover, under the statute, from the receiving town for support provided such transient, it was held that the section of the statute providing that where on appeal it shall be determined that the pauper was unduly removed the receiving town could recover the amount paid out by it for the pauper's support after his removal, was repugnant to the whole spirit and intent of the pauper statutes, and would not be enforced. Common carriers transporting paupers into a state are not subject to the penalty when they act in the ordinary course of business;[46] but if they act with fraudulent intent, they are liable.[47]

Liability for act of agent. A nonresident of the state may be liable for the penalty, although he does not personally bring the pauper into the state, but sends him under the care of another.[48]

Execution of removal order. The penalty cannot be recovered against an officer acting under an order of removal regularly made,[49] but it would seem to be otherwise where the removal order is secured in bad faith and through the misrepresentations of such person;[50] and an order of a court of one state directing the removal of a pauper into another state has been held not to relieve the officer executing the order from liability for the penalty imposed by the laws of the latter state for bringing paupers into the state.[51] It has also been held that it is no defense that defendants brought the pauper into the state while acting in pursuance of a statute of a foreign state.[52]

[§ 168] (3) Parties. When no mode of recovering the penalty is designated and no appropriation made, it accrues to the use of the state and should be prosecuted in the name of the state.[53]

[§ 169] (4) Pleading. In an action for illegally bringing a pauper into plaintiff town or county, the declaration or complaint should allege all the facts that are material to be proved.[54] Thus plaintiff should state the name of the person illegally transported, in order that defendant may know the particular charge to which he must answer.[55] A plea of not guilty puts in issue only the facts alleged in the declaration.[56]

[§ 170] (5) Evidence.[57] In an action to recover the penalty for bringing paupers into a town, etc., the burden is of course upon plaintiff to prove all the facts necessary to subject defendant to the penalty,[58] and it has been held in some jurisdictions that, as such statutes are penal, the facts must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[59]

[§ 171] (6) Questions for Jury. In an action to recover the penalty for illegally bringing a pauper into a town, the intent of defendant is a fact to be found by the jury.[60]

[§ 172] b. Action for Damages—(1) In General. The removal of paupers from the town or county in which they reside and to which they are chargeable to another town or county, thereby throwing the burden of their support upon the latter, is an actionable injury,[61] for which the appropriate remedy ordinarily is an action on the case,[62] and not assumpsit.[63] But such action cannot be maintained until the person brought into a county has been adjudicated a pauper,[64] nor until expenses for his support have been incurred by plaintiff.[65] In order to maintain the action it must generally appear that the removal was made with the intent of subjecting the town or county into which the pauper is brought to the charge of supporting him,[66] although, on the other hand, it has been held that the right of action exists whether the removal was made in good faith or with fraudulent intent.[67] Such an action cannot be maintained against a town for neglect or breach of its duty whereby its paupers stroll into another town in which they have no legal settlement, and there become chargeable to the latter.[68] In some jurisdictions an action for damages is expressly given by statute against the person unlawfully bringing a pauper into a town or county.[69]

[a] In Vermont (1) that clause of Comp. St. p 134 c 18 § 29, which gives a penalty against one who transports a poor person to a town with intent to make the town chargeable with his support, is strictly penal, although the penalty is given to the person aggrieved; while the clause giving a right of action for damages to the town to which the poor person is removed is purely remedial. Barnet v. Ray, 33 Vt 205; Calais v. Hall, 11 Vt. 494. (2) Gen. St. c 20 § 31, in addition to imposing a penalty for trans-

ment in an action for illegally bringing a pauper into a town, another action will not lie for supplies furnished to the pauper subsequent to the judgment.[70]

Measure of damages in actions for illegally bringing paupers into a town, etc., is the amount necessarily in good faith expended by the town or county in supporting the pauper from the time of his removal to the time of trial.[71]

[§ 173] (2) Evidence.[72] The burden is on plaintiff to prove facts sufficient to authorize recovery;[73] such as an intent to charge plaintiff town with the pauper's support.[74] General rules as to the admissibility of evidence[75] apply to actions for damages for illegally bringing a pauper into a town or county.[76] Declarations of the pauper to defendant as to his purpose in leaving the county, and as to the place where he intended to go, are admissible as part of the res gestæ on the question of defendant's intent in aiding in the pauper's removal.[77] Defendant may also testify as to his intention in removing or aiding in the removal of the pauper,[78] and as to his belief in respect of the place where the pauper intended to go.[79] The rule that, in an action to recover the penalty imposed for illegally bringing a poor person into a town, etc., plaintiff must establish his case beyond a reasonable doubt,[80] does not apply where plaintiff seeks to recover only the expenses of supporting the pauper, in which action a preponderance of evidence is sufficient to authorize a recovery.[81]

IV. SUPPORT, SERVICES, AND EXPENSES[82]

[§ 174] A. Support by Relatives—1. Liability—a. In General. It is generally held to be the common-law duty of a parent to support his minor children,[83] and of a husband to support his wife;[84] but beyond this a person is under no legal obligation, in the absence of statute, to support his poor relations.[85] However, for the purpose of indemnity to the public against the maintenance of paupers,[86] statutes have been passed imposing upon kindred, in certain degrees, liability for the support of their indigent or pauper relatives,[87] and such statutes have been held constitutional.[88] A statute of this kind is remedial[89] and, like other remedial statutes,[90] is to be liberally construed.[91] The provisions of the statutes in some jurisdictions have been construed as wholly prospective,[92] their operation not being delayed until the town seeking to enforce them has actually furnished necessaries, but becoming operative when the necessity of providing for a pauper by such town in default of other means arises.[93] But the state may fix the time when the liability for support shall arise,[94] and a statute imposing on relatives liability for the support of inmates of a state institution has been held broad enough to include persons who became inmates before the passage of the statute,[95] the fact that the inmate had for a time been freely maintained by the state giving no vested right to have such free maintenance continued.[96] Such a statute does not embrace an illegitimate child who has become chargeable as a pauper,[97] unless illegitimate children are expressly designated.[98]

Extraterritorial force of statute. The statutes requiring kindred to support each other have no extraterritorial force and will not be enforced by porting a poor person into a town, gives the town into which the poor person is transported an action for damages when and only when such town is not the place of his settlement. Marshfield v. Edwards, 40 Vt. 245. (3) The fact that the pauper had a settlement in some other town, or had a father able to support him, is no defense. Marshfield v. Edwards, supra.

Proc. § 857, providing that, if the mother of a child, chargeable or likely to become chargeable to a county, city, or town, has property, any two magistrates of the county or city where she is must examine into the matter, and make an order charging the mother with the payment of money for the support of her child, the mother of a bastard child, if she is able to support it, may be proceeded against. Peo. v. Chamberlain, 106 NYS 149. (2) In England under Bastardy Laws Amendment Act 1873 § 5, providing that when a bastard child "becomes chargeable to a parish" the guardians may apply to two justices for an order compelling support of the child by the putative father, and Poor Law Amendment Act (1834) § 57, providing that a man who marries the mother of a legitimate or illegitimate child shall be liable for its support, an illegitimate child may become "chargeable to a parish" within the meaning of the act of 1873, notwithstanding the mar-

the courts of other jurisdictions.[99]

Survival of liability. The statutory liability of one relative to support another exists only during the former's lifetime and does not deprive him of the right to dispose of his property by will without providing a maintenance for the latter,[1] and such liability does not continue as a claim upon his executor or against his estate.[2]

Interference with right of support. An indigent person has no right of action at common law against a negligent employer for injuries disabling an employee liable under the statute for plaintiff's support if of sufficient ability to furnish the same.[3]

Rights of creditors. It is provided by statute in some jurisdictions that money paid for support shall be exempt from the claims of prior creditors of the payee.[4]

[§ 175] b. As Dependent on Ability To Support. Persons of the requisite kinship[5] may be charged with the support of their relatives only where they are of sufficient ability.[6] In interpreting the words "sufficient ability," as used in the statutes, each case of the kind must depend upon its own special circumstances,[7] and to a large extent also upon the discretion of the court.[8] It is to be determined with reference to the existing state of things, and to the present state of defendant's property and debts, his income and probable earnings, and his present reasonable expenses;[9] and liability is not to be restricted to such persons only as have a surplus income over and above their own reasonable maintenance according to their respective stations and needs.[10] If, in the present state of his family and means, one cannot afford the assistance without reducing his property below the amount required, with his labor, to afford a comfortable support for his family, he is not to be deemed a person of sufficient ability within the meaning of the statute.[11] Yet if the required contribution would not cause present deprivation of reasonable and comfortable support of defendant and his family, or interfere with the fulfillment of his obligations to others, the fact that such contribution might impair his capital is not of itself a sufficient reason why such contribution should not be ordered.[12] In some jurisdictions it has been held that ability to support an indigent relative may depend on ability to earn money by personal labor, as well as on the possession of prop-riage of its mother to a man who is able to support the child. Plymouth Guardians of Poor v. Gibbs, [1903] 1 K. B. 177.

6. See statutory provisions.

[a] Support of parent by children.—(1) An order that the sons of an aged parent pay a certain weekly sum to the support of their mother is proper and will not be disturbed, where it appears that the sons are amply able to make the payments, and had already participated in the voluntary distribution of their mother's estate. Com. v. Hecker, 82 Pa. Super. 123. (2) In such case, the fact that the mother had conveyed a certain property to a daughter, conditioned on her providing for her care and maintenance during her lifetime, cannot be used as a defense by the other children to evade their legal responsibilities. Com. v. Hecker, supra. (3) The obligation of a man and wife with minor children to support his or her parents, pursuant to Civ. Code § 206, is limited to the extent of their ability to perform that commendable obligation, since the duty to their minor children comes first. Peo. v. Curry, 69 Cal. A. 501, 231 P 358. (4) Under a statute providing that the support of a dependent poor parent devolves upon the children if they or either of them be of sufficient ability, the question of a child's liability for the support of the parent depends not upon his age, but upon his ability. Fitzgerald v. Donoher, 48 Nebr. 852, 67 NW 880.

[b] Children without means.—Under Act (1910) No. 241, a mother could not compel her married daughters having no property or means, except that given them by their husbands, to contribute to her support. Mangin v. Mangin, 164 La. 326, 113 S 864.

[c] Parents without means.—Where the parents are poor persons without property or means and unable, on account of either physical or mental disability or other unavoidable cause, to support their infant children, and the children are without property or means and unable, on account of their tender years, to earn their livelihood, it is the duty of their relatives named in Comp. St. (1922) § 5140, who are of sufficient ability, to furnish support in the order in which they are named in Comp. St. (1922) § 5141. Howard County v. Enevoldsen, (Nebr.) 224 NW 280.

[d] Order requiring grandparents to contribute to support of grandchildren will be reversed where the record did not show the father's inability to maintain the children. Com. v. Wolodarsky, 90 Pa. Super. 531.

[e] In Vermont (1) under Gen. L. 4230, if a married man of sufficient ability to support his wife by his default suffers her to become chargeable as a pauper on a town, the town may recover the expense incurred by it for her support in an action against the husband, the recovery being limited in time covered by the expense as specified. Cabot v. St. Johnsbury, 94 Vt. 311, 111 A 454. (2) Under Rev. L. § 2822 (Gen. L. § 4232), making the father or mother or children of a poor person liable for their support if of sufficient ability, the pecuniary circumstances of the father, mother, etc., must be shown. "What is 'sufficient ability' must depend upon the circumstances in each case and as the matter rests largely in the discretion of the court it cannot depend solely upon the amount of the property the defendant owns, for in that case a child proceeded against might have a princely income and no property subject to levy. Neither can it depend solely upon the income, as his income might be small and the amount of his property large, but, as stated before, must depend upon the circumstances of each separate case." "We do not deem that the policy of the law requires a parent to be pauperized in order to receive some aid for the support of children." Irvin v. Union Tp., 33 Pa. Co. 458, 459.

[a] Thus the court will not order a parent who is old and helpless to support his child who is an insane pauper, where the effect would be to pauperize the parent by using up his entire property in a few years. Bradford County Poor Dist. v. Case, 2 Pa. Co. 644.

[b] Annual income and not actual wealth is the criterion of determination of a person's ability; he cannot be compelled to intrench upon his capital for such purpose, whereby he might himself be reduced to pauperism. Sussex County Trustees of Poor v. Jacobs, 11 Del. 330; Colebrook v. Stewartstown, 30 N. H. 9, 64 AmD 275.

[c] Where the relative is not of sufficient ability to make cash allowances, but offers to take the indigent person into his home and maintain him as a member of his family, it is sufficient. Com. v. Spaar, 8 Pa. Dist. 380, 22 Pa. Co. 406.

12. Bradley v. Fenn, 103 Conn. 1, 130 A 126; Templeton v. Stratton, 128 Mass. 137.

[a] Rule applied.—On a complaint by a town against a father for the support of his adult pauper daughter, the father was held to be of "sufficient ability" to contribute to her support, where the value of his property, above his debts, was between five thousand and six thousand dollars, notwithstanding he was in poor health, unable to do hard work, had a wife and child dependent upon him, and received an income less than his erty;[13] but in other jurisdictions it has been held that liability does not arise when the power of support depends upon manual labor alone.[14]

[§ 176] c. Condition of Person To Be Supported.[15] In order to subject a person to liability under statutes making kindred in certain degrees liable for the support of a "poor" or "pauper" relative,[16] it is necessary that the latter be unable to provide for himself and likely to become a public charge;[17] but he need not be a pauper in the technical sense that he has actually become a public charge.[18] If a mother is receiving support from one of her children, she cannot compel support from her other children.[19] So a person owning property of a substantial value and available for his support is not a poor person for whose support his relatives are liable.[20] But the mere fact that a person owns some property does not necessarily bring him within the terms of the statute if the property is not immediately available or is insufficient for his support.[21] The fact that an adult son has supported himself since he reached his majority will not relieve the parent from liability where the son subsequently becomes an invalid and unable to work.[22]

[§ 177] d. Manner and Extent of Support. The place and manner of support of an indigent relative depend upon the provisions of the statute imposing the liability.[23] In some jurisdictions this is to a certain extent for the determination of the relative on whom the liability is imposed.[24] In other jurisdictions it has been held that the duty to support does not carry with it the right to determine the place where the support shall be furnished.[25] Funeral expenses,[26] and necessary expenses incurred during the sickness,[27] are within the meaning of statutes requiring persons to "support" or to "relieve and maintain" indigent relatives. Liability for physicians' fees and hospital expenses in emergency cases rests upon persons required by statute to expenses. Templeton v. Stratton, 128 Mass. 137.

[a] The word "poor," as used in Code (1897) § 2219, providing for compelling parental contribution to the support of a pauper, is practically synonymous with "destitute," denoting extreme want and helplessness. Polk County v. Owen, 187 Iowa 220, 174 NW 99.

[b] Absolute destitution need not be shown, but it must appear "that the alleged person is without means of earning a livelihood and in want, due to neglect of those responsible for her support." New York v. Wasserman, 196 NYS 325, 328.

[c] An adult son who has no estate and who, while intoxicated, has his feet and a hand badly frozen, so as to render him, to a great degree, helpless, is a "poor person" liable to become a public charge, within a statute making the father liable for the son's support. Clinton v. Laning, 61 Mich. 355, 28 NW 125.

[a] The terms "poor person" and "pauper," as used in Rev. [b] In Michigan the statute requires a parent, if able, to support his adult son who has become or is likely to become a public charge "in such manner as shall be approved by the directors of the poor." Clinton v. Laning, 61 Mich. 355, 28 NW 125.

[c] In New York (1) when an order is made requiring a relative of a person to support him, and fixing a sum to be paid weekly, the relative may provide for the support of the pauper at such place and in such manner as he shall deem proper, provided the place and manner are approved by the overseer, and it is not until he has neglected or refused to do this that he is liable for the sum directed to be paid. Duel v. Lamb, 1 Thomps. & C. 66. (2) The right of the relative to determine the place and manner of support is unrestricted, except that they must be such as the overseers or superintendent of the poor approve. Duel v. Lamb, supra; Weaver v. Benjamin, 18 NYS 630. (3) If the person liable for support is able and willing to furnish such support at his own home, he cannot be compelled to support the poor person elsewhere. Aldridge v. Walker, 151 N. [§ 178] e. Persons Liable[29]—(1) In General. No liability arises where the person sought to be charged does not expressly or by necessary implication fall within one of the classes designated in the statute.[30]

A minor able to provide support may be compelled to do so if he is of sufficient ability and is within the statutory degree of relationship to the poor person.[31]

A county may waive its right to compel one relative to furnish support, and may pursue its remedy against another relative also liable under the statute.[32]

[§ 179] (2) Liability of Parent for Support of Child. Aside from the common-law liability on the part of parents for the support of their minor unemancipated children[33] and their adult children who are in such physical or mental condition as to be incapable of self-support,[34] the statutes in many jurisdictions have imposed on the parent, if of sufficient ability, a legal duty to support children who have become or are likely to become public charges,[35] and in some cases the statute provides that the delinquent parent shall himself be treated as a pauper.[36] The statutory liability of the parent is not affected by the fact that the child is a minor whom the parent has emancipated.[37]

Mother under coverture. Statutes imposing upon a father, mother, etc., the duty of supporting an indigent child have been held not to apply to a mother whose husband is living.[38]

[§ 180] (3) Liability of Child for Support of Parent. At common law a child is not bound to support his parent.[39] Under the statutes, however, it is very generally made the duty of a child, who is able to do so, to support its parents where the latter are helpless and indigent,[40] and this duty will be enforced where the facts show a case falling within the terms or intent of the statute.[41] But the liability is not extended beyond the cases mentioned in the statute,[42] and it can be enforced only in the mode and under the circumstances pointed Que.—Payan v. Payan, 25 RevLeg 340; Ouimet v. Ouimet, 21 Que. Super. 479.

[a] Construction and operation of statutes.—(1) Gen. St. § 3318, declaring that children able to support indigent parents shall provide support for them, and, if they neglect to do so, the superior court may order them to contribute to such support such sum as may be reasonable and necessary, does not impose on a daughter an absolute legal duty to support her mother, but the duty imposed does not come into force until the court has found the necessity for aid and the ability to aid, and prescribed to what extent aid shall be furnished; and hence the obligation does not carry with it the right to determine the place where such support shall be furnished, and the court is empowered to order the daughter to contribute to her mother's support in the place of the latter's residence. Condon v. Pomroy-Grace, 73 Conn. 607, 48 A 756, 53 LRA 696. (2) The daughter's willingness to provide for her mother a comfortable bed and sufficient food, coupled with much harsh treatment, is not decisive of the question of neglect, within the statute, and the court's finding of the fact of such neglect will not be disturbed on appeal because of such willingness. Condon v. Pomroy-Grace, supra. (3) When a father is in need of support, and his son is in a condition to furnish it to him, the latter cannot refuse to do so on the ground that his father lives with persons whom the son does not consider respectable. Ouimet v. Ouimet, 21 Que. Super. 479.
[b] Concurrent liability.—Under Poor Relief Act (1601) § 7, justices have power to make a maintenance order against the son of a woman who is a pauper lunatic, notwithstanding a similar order has already been made against her husband under Poor Law Amendment Act (1850) § 5. [a] Foundlings.—The statute is not applicable to a foundling raised by plaintiff to maturity, without adoption. Parshall v. Parshall, 56 Cal. A. 553, 205 P 1083.
[b] Liability of married woman.—Under Poor Law Act (43 Eliz. c 2) § 7, a married woman was not liable for the maintenance of her parent, even though she had a separate estate and was of sufficient ability so to out by the statute.[43]

A minor child is within the provisions of a statute making children liable for the support of their parents.[44]

Second marriage of the mother does not relieve her child from liability for the mother's support.[45]

[§ 181] (4) Liability of Grandparent for Support of Grandchild. In the absence of statute, a grandparent is under no duty to support his grandchildren.[46] But in many jurisdictions there are statutes imposing such duty,[47] and if the facts show a case coming within the terms and conditions of the statute the liability will be enforced;[48] otherwise not.[49] Such statutes are within the police power of the state,[50] and are not unconstitutional as attempts to transmute a moral obligation into a legal one.[51] The fact that the parents of a child are living does not relieve the grandparents from liability,[52] if, as held in some cases, the parents are unable to maintain the child.[53] A father's objection to his son's marriage has no effect upon his liability for the support of the children of the marriage.[54] Nor will a grandparent be relieved from liability by the fact that the probate court has appointed a guardian for his minor grandchild, with custody of the child's person.[55]

Illegitimate children. The statutes requiring a grandparent to support his grandchildren do not apply to the illegitimate offspring of his child.[56]

Effect of existing coverture. It has been held that statutes imposing in general terms liability on grandmothers for the support of their indigent grandchildren[57] should be construed as if the description were "grandmother not being under coverture," and that a grandmother whose husband is alive is under no liability for the support of her grandchild.[58]

[§ 182] (5) Liability of Grandchild for Support of Grandparent. A grandchild is not liable at common law for the support of his grandparents,[59] but is made liable in some jurisdictions by express provisions of the statutes,[60] and the fact that the grandchild is an infant does not affect this statutory liability.[61]

[§ 183] (6) Liability of Kindred by Affinity. Statutes requiring a father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, child, etc., to support each other if in need[62] do not apply to such relatives by affinity,[63]

and the fact that the relative by affinity upon whom it is sought to impose liability for the support of the poor person acquired property by virtue of the marriage does not alter the rule.[64]

[§ 184] (7) Liability of Collateral Relatives. In direct opposition to the common-law rule,[65] the statutes sometimes impose upon brothers and sisters the duty to support each other;[66] and it has been held that such statutes are not unconstitutional as depriving the relative upon whom the duty of support is imposed of his property without due process of law, as the legislature may change what is a moral duty into a legal liability, thus lessening a public burden.[67] But such statutes will be enforced only in accordance with their terms and conditions.[68] In the absence of a statute imposing liability, a nephew is not liable for the support of his uncle.[69]

[§ 185] f. Contribution and Apportionment among Relatives. Where kindred are jointly liable for the support of their relatives, and support is furnished by one, he may compel the others to contribute,[70] and it has been held that such contribution for past and future support is enforceable by a suit in equity.[71] The statutes sometimes provide for proceedings by one relative to apportion among other relatives jointly liable the cost of the pauper's support.[72] Where two persons jointly or severally liable for the support of a pauper are not of equal financial ability, the court may apportion the expense between them in proportion to their ability to pay;[73] and the court is not prevented from ordering one relative to support a poor person because there are other relatives out of the jurisdiction, or not cited to appear, who are also liable for such person's support.[74]

[§ 186] g. Exemption from Liability. Unless the statute so provides,[75] the misconduct of an indigent person will not affect the statutory liability of the relative.[76]

Bad conduct on the part of the indigent person will, in some jurisdictions, exempt relatives otherwise liable from the duty to support him.[77] A statute thus providing does not contemplate remote acts of indiscretion, or inability of such pauper to deal wisely in business affairs, but bad conduct involving some element of moral delinquency, occasioning his poverty.[78] The bad conduct must also have an immediate bearing upon, and be the material and proximate cause of, the poverty of such poor person.[79]

St. c 20 § 1, and the court had authority under the statute to apportion the burden of support according to the circumstances of the individual situation presented. Peo. v. Ramm, 197 NYS 234. (2) The first clause of such section, providing that if it shall appear that any relative of designated degrees is wholly unable to maintain an indigent person, but is able to contribute toward his support, the court may, in its discretion, direct two or more relatives of different degrees to support such indigent person, and shall prescribe the proportion which each shall contribute for that purpose, was intended to provide for cases where relatives of the degree primarily liable were able to contribute something, but unable wholly to support an indigent person. Stone v. Burgess, 47 N. Y. 521 [aff 2 Lans. 439]. (3) The second clause of such section, providing that where it shall appear that the relatives liable for the support of an indigent person are not of sufficient ability wholly to maintain such person, but are able to contribute something, the court shall direct the sum, in proportion to their ability, which such relatives shall pay weekly for that purpose, provided for cases where any particular relative was unable wholly to support such person, or where one of several equally liable was unable to contribute his entire portion for such support, but was able to contribute something, and authorized the court in such cases to require such person to contribute in proportion to his ability. Stone v. Burgess, supra. [§ 187] 2. Proceedings To Compel Support[80]—a. Nature of Remedy, and Conditions Precedent. The statutory liability imposed upon kindred for the support of their indigent relatives[81] can be enforced only by means of the remedy provided for by the statute.[82] In some jurisdictions the statute provides for a summary proceeding to obtain an order compelling the kindred of a person who has become, or is liable to become, a public charge, to furnish the necessary support;[83] and to fix liability against a delinquent relative, it is necessary that an order be made by the court directing him to discharge the duty imposed upon him, and that such direction has been ignored.[84]

A demand upon the relative to support the pauper is unnecessary before the institution of proceedings to enforce the statutory liability for support, unless the statute so requires.[85]

Seizure of property. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide for the issuance by magistrates, upon application of the overseers of the poor, of a warrant for the seizure of property of a husband who has abandoned his wife or children, and the application of the proceeds of the property to their maintenance.[86]

[f] In Vermont the statute authorizes an order for past, as well as for future, expenses, although the order cannot extend back more than six months previous to the filing of the complaint, and the death of the pauper pending the action does not relieve defendant of his liability for past expenses. Tinmouth v. Warren, 17 Vt. 606.
[g] In England (1) under Poor Law Amendment Act (1868) § 33, providing that where guardians of a union have granted relief to a married woman who requires relief, they may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union, and the justices may summon the husband to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, the duty of the justices, on the hearing of such summons, is not merely ministerial, but judicial, namely, to investigate the facts and form their own opinion as to whether the wife is in "need" of relief, apart from any conclusion arrived at by the guardians. Thomas v. Alsop, L. R. 5 Q. B. 151; Richards v. Coleman, 88 L. J. K. B. 813. (2) Where a wife has obtained a maintenance order against her husband under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act of 1895, and he has ceased to make any payments to her under the order, and the wife has subsequently required relief and become chargeable to the union, the mere fact that she had obtained a maintenance order against her husband, which the husband had ceased to obey, does not disentitle the guardians to obtain an order against the husband under Poor Law Amendment Act (1868) § 39. Birmingham Union v. Timmins, [1918] 2 K. B. 189. (3) A summons was taken out by the guardians of a union against a husband, whose wife had become chargeable, to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain her. He produced an order of a stipendiary magistrate discharging, on the ground of the wife's adultery, a previous maintenance order. The wife admitted that the order had been so discharged, but denied the adultery. The justices were of opinion that they were not bound by the order of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, and disregarded it, and made an order against the husband to pay a weekly sum for the wife's maintenance. It was held that the justices were wrong and that the valid and subsisting order discharging the order of maintenance was conclusive against the wife, and the guardians could be in no better position. Selby v. Atkins, 28 Cox C. C. 202.

S. 170, 7 EastLR 563. (2) In order to obtain the statutory relief, there must have been a direction of the muncipal council as to the manner in which the pauper was to be relieved. [c] In Massachusetts (1) under St. (1793) c 59, only the overseers of the town in which the pauper is settled or some of the pauper's kindred other than defendant can bring the proceedings to compel support. Salem v. Andover, 3 Mass. 436. (2) Rev. L. c 81 § 11 authorizes the superior court to assess a pauper's kinsman for his support. Section 38 requires overseers of the poor to prosecute or defend actions founded on the "preceding sections," etc. Under St.

or by necessary implication designated in the statute can apply for the order.[88] Thus a statute empowering a poor district, that performs its duty of relieving a poor person, to enforce the liability of his kindred does not authorize a volunteer to enforce it.[89] So where the statute provides that the proceedings to compel kindred to support a poor relative shall be instituted by a person having an interest in the latter's support,[90] the court has no power to entertain a proceeding unless the petition is by a person having such interest.[91] Under such a statute the application may be made by the poor person himself.[92] Where the statute does not provide the manner in which the action of the court shall be invoked, it may properly be done by complaint or petition of the overseer of the poor of the district liable to support the pauper;[93] but if it acts upon a petition showing jurisdiction to make an order, its action will not be invalidated because the petition was presented by the pauper.[94] By statute in some jurisdictions the right is given to any kindred who has been at any expense for the relief and support of a poor person to institute proceedings to assess and apportion the expense upon other kindred liable.[95]

[§ 189] c. Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of summary proceedings to compel the kindred of a poor person to contribute to his support is dependent upon statute.[96]

[§ 190] d. Notice and Opportunity To Be Heard. The kindred against whom the order is applied for must have notice of the application and a reasonable opportunity to be heard, even though the statute does not expressly require notice;[97] and, of course, a statutory requirement as to notice must be complied with.[98] Where the statute is silent on the subject of the manner of giving notice, it may be made by summons or rule to show cause.[99]

[§ 191] e. Petition or Complaint. The petition or complaint in proceedings to compel support should of course aver all the essential jurisdictional facts.[1] When the statute provides that a person presenting a petition must have an interest in the support of the poor person, a petition is fatally defective which fails to aver that the person making it has any interest in the support of the poor person named.[2] Unless the duty to make a demand on defendant is imposed by statute,[3] no demand by the pauper, or anyone in his behalf, need be alleged.[4]

Ability of defendant. A petition alleging that defendant is of sufficient ability to relieve and maintain a poor person is sufficient; it need not set forth in detail the income and property of defendant.[5]

Condition of person to be supported. The petition or complaint must allege that the person for whose support defendant is sought to be charged is a poor person, chargeable, or likely to become chargeable, to the town or poor district.[6] A complaint which charges failure to support a poor person "then and there being a pauper" sufficiently avers that such person is or will be a charge on the poor district.[7] It is a sufficient allegation that the poor district has incurred expenses, where the complaint sets forth that the poor person has been supported by complainant district since a certain day named therein.[8]

[§ 192] f. Evidence. General rules as to the admissibility of evidence[9] are applicable in proceedings to compel kindred to support a poor relative.[10] Likewise general rules governing the weight and (1793) p 479 c 59 § 14, under Rev. St. (1836) c 46 § 26, and under Gen. St. (1860) c 70 § 22, successively, overseers of the poor were authorized to prosecute actions under the preceding provisions of the respective chapters, including actions to compel one to contribute to a pauper kinsman's support. The language of the provision now constituting such § 38 was changed by Pub. St. (1882) c 84 § 33, by omitting the words "of this chapter" after "preceding sections." It was held that the legislature did not, by changing the phraseology of the statute, intend to restrict the overseers' authority to actions brought under Rev. L. c 81 §§ 35–37, and that such overseers can sue in the name of their town under § 11 to compel one to contribute to his pauper kinsman's support. Great Barrington v. Gibbons, 199 Mass. 527, 85 NE 737.

Burgess, 2 Lans. 439 [aff 47 N. Y. 521]. (2) But where the support of poor persons is a charge on the town until their removal to the county poorhouse, the application is properly made by the overseers of the poor of the town, and not the superintendent of the poor of the county. Tillotson v. Smith, 12 NYSt 331.

[f] In Wisconsin, where a county has adopted the county system of poor, the right to enforce liability for the support of a pauper is vested in the county superintendent of poor, so that the county court had no jurisdiction to enter a judgment, requiring such support in a suit by the supervisors of a town within the county. [a] Evidence held admissible.—In a proceeding to make parents pay their son, an alleged pauper, a sum monthly for his support, testimony that certain persons who were officers of some charitable association had said they would see to obtaining four dollars a month for the son from the trustees was admissible, the witness continuing to testify that the sum was in fact obtained. Polk County v. Owen, 187 Iowa 220, 174 NW 99.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—

sufficiency of evidence[11] are applicable in proceedings to compel support,[12] both as to the necessity for relief[13] and the ability of defendant to furnish support.[14] Where a father, in order to avoid a claim for the maintenance of his son, conveys all his property to his second wife by way of postnuptial settlement, the court can draw the inference that the father is of sufficient ability to furnish support.[15]

[§ 193] g. Trial or Hearing. In summary proceedings by application for a relief order to enforce a relative's statutory liability for support defendant has no constitutional right to a jury trial.[16] In accordance with general rules,[17] it is error to refuse instructions applicable to the issues and evidence.[18] The ability of defendant to furnish support is a question of fact for the court,[19] or for the jury where a trial by jury is had,[20] as is also the question whether the person to be supported is a poor person within the meaning of the statute.[21] Where the person to be supported, because of ownership of property, is not a poor person requiring support within the meaning of the statute, it has been held that, either a verdict against his relatives should be set aside,[22] or their plea in abatement should be sustained and the question of compelling them to contribute to the person's support be postponed until his property has been exhausted.[23]

[§ 194] h. Order for Relief—(1) Form and Contents. The order or decree for support, to be valid, must be complete in itself and self-sustaining,[24] and must declare and adjudge the existence of the statutory grounds for its existence.[25] The order must in its provisions as to relief and maintenance strictly follow the statute which is its foundation.[26] Thus an order is fatally defective for failure to direct the manner of relief and maintenance, if this is required by the statute.[27] Likewise an order is invalid if, when not so authorized by the statute, it directs payment of a given sum,[28] or embraces several poor persons in a joint provision,[29] or fixes the place or manner of support.[30] It has been held, however, that an order requiring a relative to pay a certain sum for the support of a poor person is not void because it fails to give the relative an opportunity to support such person,[31] but that this is at most an irregularity for which the order cannot be collaterally attacked.[32] Mere surplusage in the title of the order will not invalidate it.[33]

Amount of support. Unless the statute limits the power of the court as to the amount of support,[34] the court may specify in its order a fair and reasonable sum according to the financial ability of defendant.[35] Where the proceeding is brought against several persons, the order should show the amount to be paid by each.[36] In England it has been held that guardians of the poor need not fix the amount to be paid for relief in order to authorize the justices to order a husband to pay for the support of his wife,[37] but that the justices may order payment of such weekly sum as, under the circumstances, may be proper, although it may exceed the amount of relief previously given by the guardians.[38]

Relief for past support. In some jurisdictions it has been held that on an application for a relief order the court can assess only for future support, and can make no allowance for support theretofore furnished to the pauper by the town applying for such order;[39] but in other jurisdictions the court

(1) In proceedings to compel parents to contribute monthly to the support of their alleged pauper son, testimony of a witness whether, if she had known the son had a vested interest in the land, she would have expended the county's money in helping pay his rent, was properly excluded as immaterial. [a] In Pennsylvania (1) under the act of June 13, 1836, the jurisdiction of the court of quarter sessions is limited to a sum not exceeding twenty dollars a month, and it has no authority to order payment of a greater sum, even though such greater sum is reasonable and proper, considering the station in life of the parties, for the maintenance of the pauper. has power to make and enforce orders for past, as well as future, support.[40]

[§ 195] (2) Modification or Revocation. An order of support may be revoked for adequate cause[41] if revocation is sought in due season,[42] or it may be modified for sufficient cause arising out of the changed conditions and circumstances of the parties.[43] But the court will not modify an order when such modification must be based upon a showing made some two years before the petition to modify was presented.[44]

Petition for modification should be filed in the court of the county in which the order was entered.[45]

Costs in proceedings to reduce the amount of support are governed by statute.[46]

[§ 196] (3) Enforcement—(a) In General. The manner of enforcement of the relief order is a matter of statutory regulation.[47] Unless the statute so provides,[48] the relative against whom the order is issued cannot be imprisoned for noncompliance therewith.[49] When the statute directs that the sum ordered to be paid shall be levied by the process of the court issuing the order, and prescribes no other or further remedy for its enforcement, it cannot be enforced by attachment and commitment.[50] On failure to obey the order the relative is usually subject to a penalty recoverable against him,[51] or the amount he is directed to pay is recoverable in a suit against him.[52]

Limitations. The order is in the nature of a judgment,[53] and is not barred by the statute of limitations relating to actions on simple contract debts.[54]

[§ 197] (b) Requiring Security.[55] Unless authority therefor is expressly given by statute,[56] the court cannot require the relative who is directed to maintain the poor person to enter into bond for the performance of the order,[57] although the town may take a bond, voluntarily given, conditioned to save the town harmless from the support of certain persons named therein.[58] A bond executed to a poor district, conditioned to indemnify it against the maintenance of a person who has a legal settlement in such district, whether he be, or be likely to become, chargeable or not, is a legal contract,[59] and not without consideration.[60]

[§ 198] i. Review. Unless expressly given by statute,[61] the right to appellate review does not exist in proceedings of this character.[62] A defendant present on the hearing of the application and

[a] Construction.—A bond given pursuant to statute to a poor district, which contains an undertaking that a certain poor person shall not in one year become chargeable on the district and, in case of failure, to pay the district a certain sum, is a bond of indemnity only, and the district can recover thereon only such sum as it has paid out on account of the poor person. [a] Matters considered on appeal.—New York v. Wasserman, 196 NYS 325.

[b] In Maine (1) it has been held that a statutory provision that "any party aggrieved by any opinion, direction, or judgment of the District Court in any matter of law, in a cause not otherwise appealable, may allege exceptions to the same," applies to a complaint to compel the kindred of a pauper to support him. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420. (2) On the other hand, it was held in an earlier case that the term "actions" in the statutes granting appeal did not apply to a proceeding to compel support. Ex p. Pierce, 5 Me. 324.

62. Nantucket v. Cotton, 14 Mass. 243; Eaton v. Williams, 51 Wis. 99, 7 NW 838; Reg. v. London Justices, [1900] 1 Q. B. 438.

[a] Certiorari will not lie to quash a distress warrant issued by justices for a sum alleged to be due under a maintenance order, on the ground that the issuing of the warrant was a ministerial and not a judicial act. Reg. v. Webber, 16 T. L. R. 1.

[b] As to costs.—Upon a complaint to compel kindred of a poor person to contribute to his support, the superior court has a discretionary power, under Gen. St. c 70 § 11, to award costs, and no appeal lies from its decision. South Reading v. Hutchinson, 10 Allen (Mass.) 68.

[c] In Illinois (1) it is held that a proceeding to compel relatives to support a poor person is purely statutory, and a writ of error from the appellate court to review such order will not lie. Peo. v. Seeney, 223 Ill. A. 556. (2) Nor will an appeal lie from an order made in such proceeding. Peo. v. Peters, 173 Ill. A. 564.

consenting to the making of the order will not on appeal be allowed to object that the person making the application is not the proper party.[63] The trial court's conclusion of fact as to defendant's ability to furnish support is open to attack in the appellate court as a question of law, if it is claimed to have been illegally or illogically drawn from the subordinate facts.[64]

Effect of reversal. The reversal of a judgment requiring defendant to contribute to the support of a poor relative, for lack of proof that the latter was likely to become a public charge, will not bar a new proceeding based on sufficient proof.[65]

[§ 199] j. Costs. The right of the successful party to costs in proceedings of this character depends entirely upon the statute, and, unless authority therefor can be found in the statute,[66] it is erroneous for the court to award costs.[67] An action of debt lies to recover the costs awarded on granting an order against the kindred of a poor person for his support.[68]

[§ 200] 3. Actions for Support Furnished—a. By Public Authorities. A town or county may maintain an action at law to recover the amount expended in the support or relief of a pauper against such persons as the law makes liable for the pauper's support,[69] although in some jurisdictions, where the statutes provide for summary proceedings

[d] In Michigan it has been held that an order in proceedings to compel the kindred of a poor person to support him is not a "judgment" reviewable on writ of error. Smith v. Lapeer County Supts. of Poor, 34 Mich. 58.

[e] In Pennsylvania (1) no appeal on the merits lies from an order directing a relative to support a poor person. In re James, 116 Pa. 152, 9 A 170; Lampiter Tp. v. Lancaster, 2 Yeates 164; Philadelphia v. Hays, 56 Pa. Super. 352; Walker Tp. v. Knisely, 17 Pa. Super. 415. (2) An appeal in such case has the effect only of a certiorari, and the court is restricted to an examination of the record, and cannot review the evidence. In re James, supra; Com. v. Palmer, 59 Pa. Super. 307; Philadelphia v. Hays, supra; Walker Tp. v. Knisely, supra. (3) Under this restriction the court can only inquire whether the affidavit on which the proceeding was founded discloses a cause within the jurisdiction of the lower court, and, if so, whether the order was regular and within the power conferred on such court by statute. Philadelphia v. Hays, supra. (4) If the order directs respondent to pay the costs, to give security for future weekly payments, and to stand committed until the order is complied with, the portions relating to the payment of costs and the giving of a bond will be stricken off by the appellate court as unwarranted by law, and the court will not reverse the entire order and set aside the proceeding. Philadelphia v. Hays, supra. (5) Under Act July 12, 1913 (P. L. p 711), the municipal court of Philadelphia County has no jurisdiction to revise, modify, or set aside a final order made by the quarter sessions for the support of a minor for matters or reasons existing anterior to the making of the order, and which might have been brought before the court of quarter sessions at the first hearing. [a] "Civil action," as used in a statute giving costs to the prevailing party, is broad enough to cover a proceeding to compel kindred of a poor person to contribute to his support. Condon v. Pomroy-Grace, 73 Conn. 607, 48 A 756, 53 LRA 696.

[b] In Illinois (1) if the judgment is against the kindred, they may be adjudged to pay the costs, or the costs may be apportioned according to the right of the case. Peo. v. Hill, 163 Ill. 186, 46 NE 796, 36 LRA 634. (2) But if the application is dismissed, it is at the costs of the county or town on whose behalf the application was made. Peo. v. Hill, supra.

[c] In New York.—(1) Stone v. Burgess, 2 Lans. 439 [aff 47 N. Y. 521] (1 Rev. St. pp 614, 615). (2) Under Code Cr. Proc. §§ 915, 919, providing that costs and expenses of an application for the support of a poor person shall be paid by the relatives against whom the order is made, the word "expenses" means expenditure, outlay, or disbursements of money. Matter of McMurray, 131 Misc. 182, 227 NYS 115. (3) Money necessarily expended in such proceedings is a proper expense chargeable against relatives. Matter of McMurray, supra. (4) A reasonable fee for an attorney, employed by an overseer having no regular attorney, is a proper expense payable by relatives ordered to support a poor person on application by the overseer. Matter of McMurray, supra (seventy-five dollars held reasonable). (5) The overseer petitioning to compel support of a poor person is the proper person to whom costs and expenses are allowable. [a] In whose name action must be brought.—The overseers of the poor cannot maintain an action in their name against defendant to recover moneys expended by them, as agents of the township, for the benefit of defendant, but the action should be brought in the name of the township. Taylor v. Green, 12 N. J. L. 124.

[b] Amount of recovery.—A town which supports a wife neglected by her husband, standing in need of relief, may recover of the husband the amount necessary to her support as a pauper, but nothing more for supplies suitable to her condition in life. Monson v. Williams, 6 Gray (Mass.) 416.

[c] In Iowa (1) under Code (1924) § 5309, authorizing a county to recover from the kindred liable for support the amount paid by it for the maintenance of a poor person, the county's right to recover depends on whether the person relieved was a poor person, whether the county expended money for his support, and whether defendant, his son, is made liable by statute, and not whether the county might have refused relief. Bremer County v. Schroeder, 200 Iowa 1285, 203 NW 303. (2) The fact that the money was expended for the relief of the poor at the poor farm does not preclude a recovery, although there may be difficulty in ascertaining the portion expended for the support of each person, and although inmates may be required to perform work suitable for their condition, for it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the county paid out the reasonable value of maintaining each person, and proof of the reasonable value is proof of the amount expended. Hamilton County v. Hollis, 141 Iowa 477, 119 NW 978. (3) The county's right to recover from a son for the support and burial of his father is not affected by the fact that there was no written order of the township trustees admitting the father to the poorhouse, as required by Code (1924) § 5343. Bremer County v. Schroeder, supra. (4) Nor is the right to recover for the support and burial of an inmate of the county poorhouse affected by the fact that there was no record of action of the township trustees authorizing relief, and no notice given, where the board of supervisors had notice that such person was being cared for in the poorhouse. Bremer County v. Schroeder, supra. (5) The trial court's finding that the trustees acted in good faith and in the exercise of a wise discretion has the force and effect of a verdict. Bremer County v. Schroeder, supra. (6) Recovery is limited to the expense paid within two years, in view of Code (1924) § 5309, although the claim had every attribute of a continuous, open, current account within § 11,011. Bremer County v. Schroeder, supra. (7) Petition construed and held that the action was for the amount expended, rather than for the reasonable value of the support furnished. Hamilton County v. Hollis, supra.

[d] In Nebraska, before a cause of action accrues in favor of a county or its county board, under Comp. St. (1922) § 5140, against a relative who fails to furnish support to an indigent relative entitled to support under the provisions of such section, it is necessary that such delinquent relative be first directed by order of the county board to furnish support and refused to do so. Howard County v. Enevoldsen, 224 NW 280 (holding that the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant refused to obey an order of relief made by the county board).

[e] In South Dakota it has been held that a county furnishing relief to a pauper could recover therefor against the relatives made liable by statute for the pauper's support, to compel support,[70] it has been held that relief against a person whose liability is statutory must be obtained in such proceedings, and that an action of assumpsit will not lie.[71] But in other jurisdictions an action against a person liable may be brought without first fixing his liability in the statutory proceedings to compel support.[72] The burden is on plaintiff to show that defendant had sufficient ability to furnish support.[73] On the other hand, it has been held that, while the burden is on plaintiff to allege and prove that the person supported was without means of support,[74] it is incumbent on defendant to allege and prove that he had not sufficient ability to furnish the required support.[75] In an action by a poor district against a pauper's relative on a contract by him to pay a certain sum toward the support of the pauper, then chargeable to the district, the burden is on defendant to establish any affirmative defense interposed by him.[76]

Supplies furnished to wife. In accordance with the rule above stated,[77] where supplies are furnished by a town to a married woman who is in a destitute condition, assumpsit as upon an implied promise will lie against the husband therefor,[78] but such action will not lie unless the wife was in the condition of a pauper and the supplies were furnished as pauper supplies.[79]

Application for relief of a pauper need not be made by the pauper personally in order to enable a town poor district furnishing relief to recover from the pauper's relatives, an application by some one in his behalf being sufficient.[80]

Order of relief. An order of the officer to whom application for relief was made is not binding on a relative who was not a party to the proceedings had before the officer, as to applicant's indigent condition.[81]

Limitation of actions. An action of assumpsit, authorized by statute to be brought by a town for expenses incurred in the support of a poor person,[82] is barred by the statute barring an action of assumpsit founded upon any contract or liability, express or implied.[83]

[§ 201] b. By Individuals. The law will not imply a promise on the part of a relative to pay for support furnished by an individual to one whom the former is under such statutory obligation to support;[84] and it has been held that, where the statutory remedy to compel support by a relative[85] has not been resorted to, a promise by such relative to pay for support theretofore furnished is nudum pactum and unenforceable, being based solely on a moral obligation.[86] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that a physician rendering medical or surgical services to a poor person may maintain an action to recover therefor against the relative made liable by statute for the support of such poor person.[87]

[§ 202] B. Liability of Pauper and Pauper's Estate[88]—1. At Common Law. In the absence of contract[89] or of some express statutory provision,[90] where public authorities relieve a pauper, pursuant where the statute imposing the liability provides no means for its enforcement. McCook County v. Kammoss, 7 S. D. 558, 64 NW 1123, 58 AmSR 854, 31 LRA 461.

[b] In Michigan a son is under no legal obligation to support his indigent parent until an order has been obtained against him in proceedings under Comp. L. (1897) § 4487 et seq. Pinel v. Rapid R. System, 184 Mich. 169, 150 NW 897; Schwanz v. Wujek, 163 Mich. 492, 128 NW 731.

[c] In Oregon, under Bellinger & C. Comp. § 2654, providing that every poor person who shall be unable to earn a livelihood by reason of bodily infirmity shall be supported by the father, brothers, etc., and that every person failing to give such support, "when directed by the county court," shall forfeit such sum monthly as the court shall find sufficient, to be recovered for the use of such poor person, there is no liability under the statute until an order has been made by the county court. Multnomah County v. Faling, 49 Or. 603, 91 P 21; Faling v. Multnomah County, 46 Or. 460, 80 P 1009.

[d] In Pennsylvania (1) the jurisdiction to compel a repayment of money expended in support of a pauper is by proceedings in the court of quarter sessions under the acts of June 13, 1836 and April 15, 1857. Wertz v. Blair County, 66 Pa. 18. (2) But where the relative liable for support is dead, a claim for such support may properly be enforced in the orphans' court. to their statutory obligation, neither the pauper[91] nor his estate after his death[92] is under any obligation to make reimbursement; and this is the rule, even though the pauper owned property at the time the relief was furnished, in the absence of fraud[93] or deception on his part as to his ability to support himself,[94] or although he subsequently became of sufficient ability to repay.[95]

Contracts for reimbursement. It is not against public policy for a pauper voluntarily to indemnify the public authorities against expenses incurred on his account,[96] and he may bind himself by special contract to do so,[97] although it has been held that a person admitted into a county poorhouse cannot be charged for his support there, either upon express or implied contract.[98]

[a] Rule applied.—Where a poor person in need of relief transferred to the town of his legal settlement, as an indemnity for his support, a horse and other property of small value, the transfer was on sufficient consideration, and the town could hold the property against an attaching creditor of such poor person. Lyndon v. Belden, 14 Vt. 423.

[b] An assignment to a town to reimburse the town for supporting the assignor as a pauper and to cover his future support is valid, even on the assumption that the assignor was not bound to pay for either. O'Donnell v. Smith, 142 Mass. 505, 8 NE 350.

[a] Particular statutes construed.—(1) Under an act authorizing the directors of a county infirmary, as soon as any person is committed to such infirmary as a pauper, to take possession of any property he may own, and apply the proceeds thereof to his maintenance, the directors are not authorized to apply property acquired by a pauper after he enters the infirmary to the payment of his board for the time prior to the acquisition of such estate. Mason County Infirmary v. Smith, 111 Ky. 636, 64 SW 466, 23 KyL 860. (2) Under Rev. St. c 32 § 50, a town legally responsible for the support of a pauper person, upon paying to another town expenses incurred by the latter in relieving such person, may recover the amount from the person relieved. Cutler v. Maker, 41 Me. 594. (3) Where overseers of the poor take possession of the effects of a deceased pauper pursuant to St. (1817) c 186 § 6, and administration is not taken out within thirty days after his decease, they may sell so much of the property as is necessary to repay the expenses incurred for such pauper, although an administrator is appointed before the sale takes place. Haynes v. Wells, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 462. (4) Under L. (1903) c 42 § 1, authorizing a town to recover from the estate of a person sums paid for his assistance within six years before his death, recovery is limited to sums expended under the town's duty imposed by statute. Warren v. Weaver, 78 N. H. 108, 97 A 748. (5) The Pennsylvania statutes, giving to poor districts the right to seize the property of paupers for the repayment of money expended for their support, to the exclusion of other creditors, do not give them any preference over other creditors in the distribution of a decedent's estate. Wilson's Est., 2 Blair Co. (Pa.) 351. (6) In such a case the statute of limitations may be pleaded by the heirs of deceased, and will bar the recovery of support furnished prior to six years. Wilson's Est., supra. (7) Under the acts of June 13, 1836 and May 13, 1889, interest on sums expended for support is not recoverable. Wilson's Est., supra. (8) Poor Law Amendment Act (1849) § 16, providing that, where any pauper has money or valuable security, the guardians of the union or parish within which he is chargeable may appropriate so much of such money or the produce of such security, or recover the same as a debt, as will reimburse the guardians for the amount expended by them in the relief of the pauper during the period of twelve months prior to such appropriation or prior to such proceedings for the recovery, as the case may be, does not create a charge against the pauper's property in favor of the guardians. In re Benson, 87 L. J. Ch. 622. (9) Other statutes construed. Montgomery County v. Nyce, 161 Pa. 82, 28 A 999 [aff 13 Pa. Co. 594] (support in almshouse); Jester v. Jefferson Tp. [b] Term "if able" construed.—(1) Under a statute authorizing the municipal officers of a town to provide for a person infected with a dangerous disease, "at his charge, or that of his parent or master, if able, otherwise at that of the town to which he belongs," the sick person is not chargeable therewith unless he is able to pay all the expenses thus incurred. Orono v. Peavey, 66 Me. 60. (2) It has been held that the phrase "if able" relates to a person's pecuniary ability at the time the expenses are incurred, and that he is not chargeable with any part of the expenses incurred if he is not able to pay the full amount. Greenville v. Beauto, 99 Me. 214, 58 A 1026. (3) Where the charges were one hundred and seventy-six dollars and the infected person had six hundred dollars, he was "able" within the meaning of the statute. Hampden v. Newburgh, 67 Me. 370.

[c] The fact that a deceased pauper was entitled to soldier's relief which he did not receive does not bar an action by the poor officers to recover for his support as a pauper. Crossman v. New Bedford Sav. Inst., 160 Mass. 503, 36 NE 477.

[d] Property chargeable.—(1) In Wisconsin, St. (1921) § 49.10, providing that, if an inmate of a public institution receiving relief at public charge was, at the time of receiving the relief, the owner of property, the authorities "may sue for and collect the value of the same against such person and against his estate," charges only the property owned at the time such support was furnished and not the property subsequently received, and the property must be of such value as to make it reasonable to sue therefor. In re Decker, 181 Wis. 484, 195 NW 316. (2) In Pennsylvania, where the real covery of such expenses from the estate of a pauper dying without heirs is valid,[1] even though retrospective in providing that it shall apply to property of paupers who have died before its enactment.[2] The statutes do not apply, however, to a purely officious payment of expenses which a town was under no legal obligation to make,[3] nor to expenses for items which properly cannot be classed as pauper supplies.[4] A statute, providing for a recovery against the pauper by towns which "have incurred expense" in his support, has been held applicable only to expenses incurred after the passage of the act.[5] So under such a statute it must appear that some expense was actually incurred for the pauper's support,[6] and this is not shown where it appears that the pauper received support in an almshouse and at the same time rendered services to an amount equal in value to the cost of such support.[7]

Coverture is no bar to an action under the statute against a married woman for pauper supplies furnished her after she had been deserted by her husband.[8]

Limitation of actions. Actions against paupers to recover the expenses of relief furnished are subject to the general statutes of limitation.[9]

[§ 204] C. Support of Pauper Slaves.[10] Prior to the abolition of slavery in the United States, the statutes in most jurisdictions made a master liable for the maintenance of decrepit slaves, or those manumitted, who thereafter became paupers.[11] And under some statutes the heirs, personal representatives, and assigns of a deceased master were liable.[12] But a bona fide purchaser of real estate descending to an heir of the master was not liable.[13] The town where the emancipated slave belonged, or had a settlement, was the town empowered to recover from the master, or his heirs, executors, or administrators, for expenditures incurred for the support of such slave.[14]

[§ 205] D. Support by Local Authorities in General[15]—1. Local Authorities Liable—a. In General. The power and duty of public authorities generally to provide for poor persons needing relief having already been discussed,[16] it remains in this connection only to consider the liability of particular governmental subdivisions inter sese,[17] which is usually dependent on a determination of the pauper's place of residence[18] or settlement.[19] estate of a pauper is sold after his death by his administrator for the payment of debts under a decree of the orphans' court, the poor district cannot maintain a claim in the orphans' court to reimburse itself out of the proceeds of the sale for maintenance of the pauper furnished to him in his lifetime. Hains' Est., 48 Pa. Super. 396; Stewart's Est., 38 Pa. Super. 177.

[§ 206] b. State Paupers. The determination as to who are "state paupers" and what public author-

[e] Repayment of relief given by way of loan (1) becomes due on application by the guardians to the poor person so relieved for its repayment. Proceedings before justices for attachment of wages in respect of relief so given are complaints within the meaning of Summary Jurisdiction Act (1848) § 11, and time runs for the commencement of such proceedings from the date of application for repayment, and not from the date of the loan. Ashby-de-la-Zouch Guardians v. Summers, [1928] 2 K. B. 397. (2) Under Poor Law Act (1927) § 46 subs 1, a court of summary jurisdiction is not a "court for the recovery of small debts," and therefore has no jurisdiction to deal with applications under that subsection for the recovery of relief granted by way of loan. Evans v. Morgan, [1928] 2 K. B. 527.

[f] In New York (1) under Poor L. § 57, providing for recovery against a person or his estate by the poor law officers of any town or city which has furnished him support if it shall at any time be ascertained that the person so assisted or supported owns real or personal property, such action cannot be maintained in the absence of evidence that such person applied to the poor authorities for relief, concealed or misrepresented his property, or deceived the overseer of the poor in any way into believing that he was destitute. In re Thomas, 132 Misc. 842, 231 NYS 93; Matter of Humphries, 125 Misc. 62, 210 NYS 253. (2) Such statute did not intend to sweep away the obligation of a father of infants so supported, even though they are possessed of means for their own support, but the support to be compensated for is that provided for one for whom no one else is primarily liable for support. Coler v. Callahan, 105 Misc. 457, 174 NYS 504. (3) In an action under such provision to recover from minors money expended for their maintenance in an institution before discovering their ownership of property, the burden was on the city to show that the primary duty of their living father to support them was not discharged, and was unenforced because possible recovery against him was precluded by his lack of property. Coler v. Callahan, supra. (4) After the death of their father and mother, infants who had been supported by the city in an institution, but who had property or means for their own support, became liable, under such statute, and moneys thereafter expended for their maintenance were chargeable against their separate estates. Coler v. Callahan, supra.

ities are liable for their support is regulated by statute.[20] In some jurisdictions the statute provides that all persons needing relief, who have no settlement in the state, shall be state paupers, and be supported by the state for a period fixed by the statute, and, after the expiration of such period, all such paupers shall be sent back to the town where they resided when they first applied for relief, and thereafter be a town charge.[21] Where the state is in charge of a quarantine, the expense of the burial of paupers who die in its charge rests upon the state.[22]

(1903) §§ 9360, 9361, 9362, providing for the care of nonresident paupers by the county wherein they are found, and reimbursement therefor by the county of such paupers' residence, apply to all counties in the state, including counties under township organization which have not established a poorhouse. Rock County v. Holt County, 78 Nebr. 616, 11 NW 366.

[b] Liability as between county and town or township.—(1) In Illinois, under Rev. St. c 80, the liability of counties for the support of paupers was not transferred to townships by the act of Febr. 12, 1849, providing for township and county organization; and hence a county adopting township organization remained liable for such support thereafter. La Salle County v. South Ottawa, 12 Ill. 480. (2) In Michigan, under Pub. Acts (1883) § 35 (3 Howell St. § 1789) the township in which a poor person has gained a settlement is liable for his support, and not the county, where such county has adopted the distinction between township and county poor. La Grange Tp. v. Cass County Superintendents of Poor, 115 Mich. 181, 73 NW 114. (3) In Nebraska, in counties under township organization, in which a poorhouse has not been established, the burden of supporting poor in respective townships, under Rev. Custer Tp. v. Antelope County, 103 Nebr. 128, 170 NW 600. (4) In New York, where a county board of supervisors abolished the distinction between town poor and county poor in 1909, pursuant to Poor L. § 138, and in 1912 a certain person became a poor person and began to receive relief, and in 1913 the board restored the distinction, the status of such poor person did not become fixed by having been a poor person whose support was chargeable to the county, and after the distinction between town poor and county poor was restored, the town became liable for his support, notwithstanding no provision is made by §§ 139, 140 for the disposition of moneys in the hands of the overseers of the poor, where the distinction between town poor and county poor is revived or restored, the fund in the hands of the overseers of the poor being a contingent fund, which is saved to the county like other contingent funds. Cassidy v. Little Falls, 189 App. Div. 527, 179 NYS 493. (5) Where the overseers of the poor of the town of G, in the county of G, supposing their town liable for the support of a pauper having no settlement in the state, in good faith removed him from C, in another county, to G, and supported him there, it was held that the town of G might recover of the county of G for such support. Grafton v. Grafton County, 43 N. H. 382. (6) Under the act of June 25, 1885, a town, and not the county in which it is situated, is liable for the expense of care and removal to his home of a nonresident of the state who, immediately after obtaining employment in the town, is injured so as to be rendered a public charge. [f] In Kansas, under a statute providing for the removal of the poor person to the place of his settlement, "if the same can be conveniently done," but that if such person cannot be so removed he shall be relieved by the overseer of the poor, the question of removal is within the overseer's discretion, and if he determines that the person cannot properly be removed, his determination binds the county for the expenses of such person's relief. Stevens v. Miami County, 6 Kan. A. 438, 49 P 798.

[g] In Michigan, under 1 Howell

er statutory provisions make certain classes of counties liable for expenses incurred in relieving needy and sick and indigent persons therein who have no known legal settlement in the state.[26] Such statutes have been held constitutional,[27] and a township which has furnished relief to such a person is entitled to reimbursement from the county.[28] Where a statute provides that the county, subject to such rules and regulations as the county board shall prescribe, shall furnish relief to a nonresident or to a person not coming within the definition of a pauper, who shall fall sick therein, without having the means of paying for his board, medical treatment, etc.,[29] the county cannot relieve itself of its statutory liability by refusing or neglecting to make any rules and regulations on the subject;[30] nor can it make unreasonable rules and regulations,[31] such as limiting its duty to a particular class of persons not embraced within the statute,[32] or making its relief dependent upon the conduct of the person to be relieved.[33] The facts that proceedings have been instituted against the relatives of a pauper, and that they have been required to contribute to his support, will not relieve the county from its primary liability to provide for the support of such person.[34]

[§ 208] d. Liability of Place of Residence. Under the pauper statutes generally, a town or county is usually made liable in the first instance for the support of a pauper who resides therein,[35] although the town or county in which he has his legal settlement is ultimately liable therefor.[36] The liability of the poor district of a pauper's residence is not affected by the fact that, owing to confusion of boundaries, he has been supported by another district,[37] and the fact that a pauper has been temporarily removed from the town of his residence by the supervisor thereof, acting within his powers, will not change the legal residence of such pauper so as to relieve the town from liability.[38] So the fact that the relief is furnished by another town or county into which the pauper goes for a transient purpose only does not affect the liability of the place of his residence,[39] provided the person to whom the relief is furnished is strictly a transient person,[40]

St. § 1755 et seq, the burden of supporting paupers is upon the county in which they may be, except as to paupers who have gained a settlement in counties in which the distinction between county and township poor has not been abrogated, in which case a pauper is to be supported by the township of the county in which he has gained a settlement. Kalkaska County Superintendents of Poor v. Grand Traverse County Superintendents of Poor, 120 Mich. 247, 79 NW 196; La Grange Tp. v. Cass County, 115 Mich. 181, 73 NW 114.

St. (1845) c 80 § 15, providing for the support of paupers who have no fixed abode, but have been employed by some one else. Dorr v. Seneca, 74 Ill. 101; Franklin County v. Henry County, 26 Ill. [b] Illegitimate children.—(1) Under Poor L. § 62, read in connection with the amendment of Inferior Criminal Courts Act § 31 subd 3, by L. (1918) c 517, responsibility for the support of a bastard child is with the town or city of the actual bona fide residence of the mother, and is not avoided by birth out of the state, possibly on a journey or transient stay out of its territory. [d] In New Hampshire (1) under Gen. L. c 83 § 15, residence within a county for not less than one year renders it liable for the support of a poor person, whether relief was furnished to him within the time of such residence or not. Merrimack County v. Grafton County, 63 N. H. 550, 4 A 390. (2) Under the act of July 4, 1861, abolishing all settlements gained before January, 1820, persons whose settlements were thereby lost became county paupers, and the county in which they resided at the time pauper aid was given, although not the county of their former settlement, was liable therefor if such residence was bona fide and they had no home or domicile in any other county. Northfield v. Merrimack County, 43 N. H. 165. (3) Under Rev. St. c 85 § 9, as amended by L. (1903) c 67 § 3, the county in which the pauper had last resided for one year in the last five years, at the time relief was applied for, is chargeable with his support, although he had been aided within one year by another county in which he had not resided for three months at the time the relief was furnished. Merrimack County v. Hillsborough County, 80 N. H. 387, 118 A 813.

[e] In Vermont (1) the object of Act (1886) § 13, providing that the residence of a person shall be in the town in which he last resided for three full years, maintaining himself and his family, was to make the duty to support paupers dependent on their residence without any reference to their place of legal settlement. Chittenden v. Barnard, 61 Vt. 145, 17 A 844; Worcester v. East Montpelier, 61 Vt. 139, 17 A 842. (2) This means of acquiring a residence was not limited to the time subsequent to the taking effect of the statute. Chittenden v. Barnard, supra; Worcester v. East Montpelier, supra. (3) Hence where, upon the taking effect of such statute, the legal settlement of a pauper was in E, but his necessary residence in W, E thereupon ceased to be and W became chargeable with his support. Worcester v. East Montpelier, supra. (4) Under St. § 3171, providing that, if the pauper, when in need, has not resided in the town furnishing the support "for three years supporting himself and family," such town may recover the expense thereof from the town where he last resided for the space of three years supporting himself and family, it is immaterial that the pauper afterward resided outside the state. Granville v. Hancock, 69 Vt. 205, 37 A 294.

although in some jurisdictions the statute has been construed to make the place of a person's residence liable for relief furnished to him in another town or county only where such person was a pauper at the time of his departure from his place of residence.[41]

Where a person has no settlement in the state, it is the duty of the town where he resides to support him,[42] but where such a pauper moves to another town, the town of his prior residence is no longer liable for his support.[43] Where a poor person having no settlement in the state is injured in one township, and several years thereafter for the first time requires public aid in another township, the latter township is liable for his care.[44]

Persons sent to the county poorhouse before the passage of a statute making the town of a pauper's residence liable for his support do not thereby cease to be residents of the town from which they were sent so as to relieve such town from liability for their support.[45]

Burial expenses. Where a statute makes a county liable for the burial expenses of honorably discharged soldiers who die therein, the county is not liable for the burial expenses of a soldier who had been a resident of the county, but who died in a soldiers' home in another state.[46]

[§ 209] e. Liability of Place of Settlement.[47] In most jurisdictions the town or county of a pauper's legal settlement is liable for his support, and where relief has been given to such pauper by another town or county, or by the state, it is entitled to reimbursement by the place of his settlement,[48] and a statute providing for the support of paupers by the town to which they "belong" means the town in which they are settled,[49] and not the town in which they reside.[50] A town which advanced money to a person not a pauper, for his support and that of a weak-minded child whom he was not able to support, may recover from the town of the child's settlement so much of the money as actually went to the child's support.[51] But since the obligation to support the indigent is purely statutory,[52] no reimbursement from the town or county of a pauper's settlement can be had, in the absence of a provision of the

[b] Statutes construed and applied.—(1) Under St. (1793) c 59 the only remedy of a town which has relieved a pauper, to recover the expense of such relief, is against the town of the pauper's settlement. Salem v. Andover, 3 Mass. 436. (2) If a minor born out of wedlock has no relative who is liable for his support, and his legal settlement is in a town other than the one sued for nursing, such other town may be compelled to pay the expenses under Gen. [c] Expenses of quarantine.—(1) Rev. St. c 18 § 51, providing that nurses and their assistants and necessaries furnished a quarantined person shall be at his charge, or that of his parents or master if able, and otherwise, at that of the town to which he belongs, was not repealed by implication by Pub. L. (1909) c 25 § 2, providing that expenses, including supplies of food, medicines, etc., furnished a quarantined person or such part thereof as the board of health may determine, shall be deemed a legitimate expenditure for the protection of the public health, and shall be charged to the account of incidental expenses of the town, but not to any pauper account, and that no person so quarantined and assisted shall be considered a pauper, the former statute being designed to divide the expenses, so that the part designed to protect the community where the infected person is found should be borne by that town, and the part incurred for his healing and comfort should be borne by the patient or by the town of his settlement, while under the latter statute both kinds of expenditures for indigent persons are grouped together, and it is left to the board of health to determine how much shall be borne by the town of the settlement, and how much by the town where the quarantined person is found. Eden v. Southwest Harbor, 108 Me. 489, 81 A 1003. (2) Under Pub. L. (1909) c 25 § 2, providing that expenses of a quarantined person or such part thereof as the board of health may determine shall be charged to the account of incidental expenses of the town, etc., determination by the board of health of a town where nurses, necessaries, etc., were furnished persons having their pauper settlement in another town, that the expenses should be paid by the town of settlement, renders the latter town liable. Eden v. Southwest Harbor, supra.

[d] Alien paupers.—(1) Act March 23, 1905 (Pub. L. [1905] c 142) § 1, providing that the revised statutes shall not be construed to render a town liable for relief furnished an alien or his family since the statutes took effect, does not deprive an alien who gained a settlement before March 23, 1905, of any benefits previously acquired by such settlement. Augusta v. Waterville, 106 Me. 394, 76 A 707. (2) Under Rev. St. c 27 § 1 par 6, giving a pauper settlement to one residing in a town for five years without receiving support as a pauper, an alien who acquired a settlement before the act of March 23, 1905 was passed was entitled to support. Augusta v. Waterville, supra. (3) Act March 23, 1905 (Pub. L. [1905] c 142) § 1, providing that relief furnished to alien paupers shall be within the provisions of Rev. St. c 27 § 33, relieves towns from their support and provides for their relief the same as persons having no legal settlement, the place of their settlement being immaterial. Augusta v. statute authorizing such recovery,[53] unless there is an express contract for reimbursement.[54] Where a pauper, at the date of the application for relief, had no settlement in the municipality sought to be charged with his support, no recovery can be had for relief given by plaintiff town.[55]

Unsettled husband of wife having settlement. Where a wife has a settlement in the state, but her husband is unsettled, and, becoming a pauper, is relieved by the town in which he resides, no recovery of the expense of such relief can be had by such town against the town of the wife's settlement.[56] So, where a wife and her children have a settlement in the state, but her husband is unsettled, a town which furnishes supplies to the family may recover therefor from the town where the wife and children have their settlement, but not for supplies furnished to the husband.[57]

Minor children of unsettled parents. It has been held that, although a child born in the state, of parents who have acquired no settlement therein, has its settlement in the place of birth,[58] nevertheless, in order to prevent the separation of the child from its parents, it should be supported during its minority by the town where the father is chargeable and supported, although such town may require reimbursement from the town of the child's settlement.[59]

Marriage procured by collusion of town authorities. Where the statute provides that settlements shall not be changed by marriages procured by the agency or collusion of town authorities,[60] if the marriage of a female pauper to a man settled in another town is so procured, and the town of the husband's settlement supports her as a pauper, it may recover the amount expended from the town of her original settlement.[61]

[§ 210] f. Alteration, Annexation, or Detachment of Territory.[62] By a separation of a part of its territory and inhabitants, by annexation or a new incorporation, the liability of a town to support the paupers having a legal settlement therein remains unaltered in the absence of any statute to the contrary.[63] But as this separation must be made by the legislature, the act authorizing it may,[64] and frequently does,[65] impose conditions or limitations to relieve the town which is to be deprived of a part of its inhabitants. But if no legislative provision be made, the settlement of any person in the old town and the consequent liability of such town for his support, is not affected by the new incorporation, unless at the time of the new incorporation he shall dwell within the limits of it, and, as a party to it, acquire a new settlement in the new town.[66] Unless it is apparent that the legislature intended to prescribe a rule for all pauper cases liable to arise between two sections of a divided town and to supersede the general law by the specific provision, cases which do not fall within the specific provision will be governed by the general law.[67]

Unsettled pauper. Where a town is divided, a pauper residing therein, without any settlement in the state, must be supported by that town in which his residence may be established at the time of the division.[68] And it has been held that, where an unsettled pauper resided in a town at the time of its division, the duty to support him devolved upon the new town, if his place of residence, at the time he became chargeable, was within the limits of the new town.[69]

Castine v. Winterport, 56 Me. 319. Sutton v. Dana, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 383. (3) Where parts of different towns were formed into a district, a provision in the act of incorporation, that the inhabitants of the district should "provide for the support of all the poor who were inhabitants within the district before the passing of the act, and shall be brought back for maintenance hereafter," was limited to those individuals who before were inhabitants within the district and might be brought back, and did not include their descendants. the territory of one town is annexed to another town, or incorporated into a new town, an agreement between the towns as to the future support of paupers, not inconsistent with the act of incorporation or with the general pauper statutes, is enforceable as between the parties thereto,[70] although such agreements between towns cannot affect the settlement by their inhabitants, or the rights of third parties in relation thereto.[71] And an agreement is not conclusively presumed from the fact that the officers of the old town, for a long period of time after the alteration of the territory, continued to support the pauper.[72]

[§ 211] 2. Fixing Liability—a. Ascertainment of Poverty. In some jurisdictions, in order to charge a town or county with relief and maintenance of a poor person, he must first have been adjudged a pauper by the tribunal designated by the statute, usually the county court, or a justice of the peace,[73] and unless the statute is complied with no liability for supplies furnished or services rendered arises.[74] There is no distinction in regard to a county's liability for funeral expenses and its liability for services rendered to the pauper in his lifetime; and in both cases a previous adjudication of poverty is necessary to fix that liability.[75]

[§ 212] b. Ascertainment and Adjudication of Settlement. A county, town, or municipality cannot be charged in an action for the care and maintenance of a pauper prior to an adjudication of such pauper's settlement by the proper tribunal.[76] Such adjudication may, however, be made after the expenditures have been incurred.[77] The adjudication as to settlement, although valid until impeached,[78] may be set aside for fraud or mistake.[79]

[§ 213] c. Removal and Order Therefor. In some jurisdictions in which the statutes provide for removal of paupers to the place of their legal settlement,[80] it has been held that there can be no recovery against the town in which a pauper has a legal settlement by a town in which he is a resident for expenses incurred in his support prior to an order of removal,[81] except in the case of extreme sickness or death,[82] or where the poor person is a transient.[83] In jurisdictions where it is provided that, if the town of a pauper's settlement shall, within a designated period after notice, remove the pauper from the town giving notice, it shall be charged only at a specified rate per week, regardless of the actual expense incurred by the town giving notice,[84] actual removal is a condition precedent which must be strictly performed within the time limit.[85] The voluntary removal of the pauper,[86] or the removal of the pauper after his decease, although before burial,[87] is not sufficient to absolve the town of settlement from payment of the actual expenses incurred. Refusal of the pauper to return or to be taken back does not discharge the town of his settlement from liability.[88]

[§ 214] d. Notice by Local Authorities Furnishing Relief[89]—(1) Necessity. By common law a town or district affording relief to a pauper for whose support it was not liable must, in order to recover the expenses incurred, give to the town of his settlement or to the town liable for his support reasonable notice of the facts and make demand before suit for the amount claimed.[90] The question of notice is, however, governed almost entirely by statute, and where the statute expressly requires notice to be given,[91] the giving of such notice is an indispensable prerequisite to the maintenance of an action against a town or district liable for the pauper's support to recover for supplies furnished by plaintiff town or district.[92]

[§ 215] (2) Form and Sufficiency—(a) In General. No particular form of notice is necessary,[93] it being sufficient that the notice convey the necessary information to the proper person.[94] Reasonable care and diligence must be exercised in obtaining and communicating the fact;[95] and if this is done a mere inaccuracy or informality will not vitiate the notice.[96] But a notice containing misstatement of a material fact is void.[97] It has been held that notice need not be an entity, and that if all the facts necessary to constitute legal notice are severally communicated within the proper time it is sufficient.[98] So a notice has been held sufficient when accompanied by a letter which, construed with the notice proper, contains all the essential information required.[99]

Oral or written notice. Where the statute requires notice to be in writing,[1] an oral notice is of no effect.[2] And it has been held that the notice must be in writing, even though the statute does not expressly so provide.[3]

[§ 216] (b) Name or Description of Pauper. A pauper notice should state the names of the paupers or otherwise so describe them that the authorities of the town notified may identify them with reasonable certainty;[4] and if the identity of the pauper is sufficiently established a slight error in the name does not render the notice defective.[5] A misnomer, however, without further means of identification will render the notice defective.[6]

L. p 18) a poor district cannot recover from a county the expenses of burying a pauper who had no settlement in the state, if it appears that such expenses were paid before any notice was given to the county commissioners. Cowanshannock Poor Dist. v. Armstrong County, 31 Pa. Super. 386.

[c] Facts held not to dispense with need of notice.—The fact that the county in which the pauper had his settlement sent the pauper into another county where he was for a time supported by a relative, but subsequently became a public charge in the latter county, does not dispense with the need of the statutory notice. Rock Island County v. Mercer County, 96 Ill. A. 531.

[d] In Minnesota the notice required by statute to be given by a town, that a pauper within its limits is a county charge, is not a condition precedent to the right of recovery by a town for expenses incurred in caring for the pauper, but is to give the county authorities an opportunity to examine into the matter. [b] Omission or substitution of an initial for the middle name will not vitiate the notice if the identity of the pauper is otherwise sufficiently certain. Hamden v. Bethany, 43 Conn. 212 (where a notice calling the pauper "William Hall" was held sufficient, his real name being William E. Hall, his identity being further indicated by the statement that he had a broken leg; and the notice was not rendered defective by the fact that in the town named there actually lived a William Hall, whose leg, however, was not broken); Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505 (where a notice omitting the middle name was held sufficient, the pauper being otherwise described as the child of clearly indicated parents).

[c] Identity held sufficiently shown.—(1) A notice calling the pauper "Joan" and "Joanna," her real name being Joann, she being otherwise identified as the child of parents sufficiently described. Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505. (2) A notice calling the pauper "Sarah or Sally," her name being Sally. Shelburne v. Rochester, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 470.

6. Auburn v. Wilton, 74 Me. 437; Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505.

[a] Notices held defective.—(1) Notice calling pauper "Benton L. Blackwell," his real name being Bennetto L. Blackwell. Auburn v. Wilton, 74 Me. 437. (2) Notice calling pauper "James," the real name being

"Wife," "children," and "family." A woman is sufficiently named as the wife of a man whose name is correctly given,[7] although a notice calling a woman the "wife" of a man with whom she is in fact living in adultery is fatally defective.[8] But a notice describing a parent by name, including in general terms his "children" or "family," is insufficient as to anyone except the parent;[9] and, a fortiori, a notice stating that a named person has become chargeable is insufficient to include his wife[10] or children.[11] On the other hand, a notice including parents and "children," giving the number of the children, has been held sufficient,[12] unless the number of children is misstated.[13] So the designation of the pauper as "the daughter" of a named person has been held insufficient,[14] although, on the other hand, it has been held that a notice specifying "the child" of a person named imports that there is but one child and is sufficient.[15]

Curing defect by parol. A defect in designating the pauper cannot be supplied by oral information.[16] Nor, upon trial, will evidence be admitted to prove that the designation could apply to only one person in the district.[17]

[§ 217] (c) Settlement of Pauper. A pauper notice must allege the settlement of the pauper to be in the town sought to be held liable.[18] But it need not contain an allegation of the means by which the settlement was obtained,[19] and, if such an allegation is made, the fact that it is erroneous will not estop the town giving notice to prove, in an action to recover expenses incurred, that the settlement was acquired in a different manner,[20] unless the statement was meant to mislead.[21] It has been held that a notice describing the pauper as having a "residence," instead of a "settlement," in the town notified does not render the notice defective if it appears plainly that it is claimed that such town is liable, and that it is requested to remove the pauper.[22]

A notice describing a pauper as an "inhabitant" of the town to which notice is given is equivalent to stating that his settlement was there.[23]

[§ 218] (d) Condition and Chargeability of Pauper. Where the statute requires the notice to state the condition of the pauper,[24] a notice which fails to contain such statement is ineffective.[25] The word "condition," as used in the statute, refers to pecuniary condition,[26] and a notice stating only the person's physical condition is insufficient.[27] A provision for a statement of the pauper's condition does not require the notice to state that medical services were necessary for him.[28]

Chargeability. Under the pauper statutes, either by express provisions or by implication arising from the requirement that the notice shall state all the material facts on which the liability of the town notified is based,[29] the notice must contain an allegation that the pauper is chargeable to, or is being supported by, the town or county sending the notice.[30] Notice that a pauper has become chargeable is not notice that his wife and children have become chargeable.[31] On the other hand, a notice that a wife is chargeable is sufficient, although there is no allegation of chargeability of the husband.[32]

[§ 219] (e) Statement of Expenses Incurred. The statutes usually require the notice to contain a statement of the amount expended in the relief of the pauper.[33] But by the weight of authority the account need not be itemized to show the several amounts expended.[34] If several individuals constituting one family are supported together, the notice need not specify the sums expended for each individual,[35] and if a notice for the support of several paupers is bad as to some of them, recovery can be had for the expense of the others.[36] If the amount claimed in the notice is too great and the mistake is made in good faith, recovery may be had for what is proved to be reasonably due;[37] but if the officer giving notice knows that some of the items are much larger than the town has paid or assumed to pay, nothing can be recovered on such items.[38] And if the amount in the writ is smaller than the amount claimed in the notice, recovery must be limited to the former sum.[39]

[§ 220] (f) Request To Remove. Under some statutes a pauper notice must contain a request that the town notified remove the pauper to its own jurisdiction,[40] and the omission of such request renders the notice insufficient.[41] But such a provision obviously does not apply where the death and burial of the pauper intervened before notice was given.[42] A request to remove may be inferred from a statement that reimbursement for expenses is claimed "till removal."[43]

[§ 221] (g) By Whom Signed.[44] The pauper statutes contemplate that the notice shall be signed in the name of the overseers of the poor,[45] and a notice signed by some other person in their behalf is not sufficient,[46] even though this is done under instructions of the overseers.[47] It is sufficient, however, if the notice is signed by a majority of the board of overseers,[48] or by one overseer in behalf, or by order, of the board.[49] If there are no overseers of the poor the notice must be signed by the officers who exercise their functions.[50] Thus a notice may be signed by a majority of the selectmen or by one of them in behalf of the others,[51] or by the mayor of a city[52] or by the auditor of a county.[53] Notice signed by selectmen need not state that they are acting as overseers of the poor,[54] it being presumed that no overseers were chosen, and that the selectmen were acting in that capacity virtute officii.[55]

[§ 222] (3) Service—(a) Upon Whom. Statutory provisions as to the service of notice must be strictly pursued.[56] Overseers of the poor are the proper officers to receive a pauper notice, and it should therefore be directed to, and served upon, one of them.[57] If, however, there are no overseers the notice may be served upon one of the officers who exercise their functions with respect to the poor, such as selectmen[58] or supervi-

[a] In Vermont, however, it has been held that a town cannot recover for services rendered to a pauper by a physician the amount of whose account was not stated as a distinct item in the notice of claim given to the town liable, although it appears that the amount of that account was included in another item in the notice but without any specific designation. Sanford v. Lebanon, 31 Me. 124.

[b] In New Hampshire it has been held, under a statute requiring that the sums expended for the relief of several paupers, and the notice is defective as to one or more of the paupers, recovery cannot be had, unless the particular sum expended for each of the remaining paupers is stated. sors[59] of a town or the auditor of a county.[60]

[§ 223] (b) Manner of Service. The notice must be served in accordance with the provisions of the statutes.[61] Where the statute provides that the notice shall be served by leaving it with a designated officer of the town to be notified,[62] it may be served by leaving it at his usual place of abode.[63] It has been held that service by mail is insufficient in the absence of a statute authorizing service in such manner.[64] Where service by mail is authorized,[65] and evidence is introduced to prove mailing, defendant may offer evidence to rebut such proof.[66] The presumption is that a notice mailed was received in the due course of mail.[67]

Return of service. Where the statute requires a return of the notice to be made within a specified term by the officer who served it,[68] such return is a condition precedent to a recovery against the town notified.[69] The return may be amended to conform to the facts.[70]

[§ 224] (4) Time of Giving Notice.[71] It is very generally prescribed by statute that a pauper notice must be given within a specified time, usually three months, after the expenses for which recovery is sought were incurred.[72] Such provisions are mandatory,[73] and failure to comply therewith will prevent recovery.[74] If the notice is received within the statutory time, the fact that it bears no date is immaterial.[75] Where the statute requires the notice to be given "immediately" upon the furnishing of the relief,[76] unreasonable delay in giving the notice will prevent recovery for such relief.[77] The notice must be given within the specified time after expenses were incurred, not within such time after they were paid.[78] A notice which by mistake includes some items arising before the statutory period, giving means of distinguishing what came before, is not invalid.[79]

Knowledge of pauper's place of settlement. Where the statute provides that town officers shall give notice within a certain time after they know to what town the pauper belongs,[80] failure to give notice within the designated time will prevent recovery for expenses incurred after such knowledge was acquired,[81] but not for expenses incurred before that time.[82]

Where no time is prescribed, reasonable notice is all that is required.[83]

Premature notice. The notice should not be given before the pauper has actually become chargeable.[84] But a notice is not premature if given after the supplies have been ordered in a case of actual necessity, although none have been actually furnished or consumed.[85] The notice may be given before the supplies furnished are paid for.[86]

[§ 225] (5) Waiver—(a) Of Notice. A town liable for the support of a pauper may waive statutory notice and demand from the town incurring expenses in the relief of a pauper.[87] And if the waiver prevents notice being given, the ordinary doctrine of estoppel applies.[88] A denial of liability by the poor officer of the town liable, and refusal to support the pauper, is an implied waiver of written particularized notice.[89] So the receipt of bills for support without objection is a waiver of a more formal notice.[90] A new notice is not a waiver of a former notice nor of any rights acquired thereunder.[91]

[§ 226] (b) Of Defects in Notice.[92] A defect in a notice may be waived by the town upon which the notice is served.[93] The waiver may be implied.[94] And an answer denying liability upon some ground other than the defect in the notice waives a defect,[95] such as misnomer or indefinite description of the pauper,[96] calling a district a town,[97] want of particularization or itemizing of expense,[98] or the want of signature of the overseers in their official capacity;[99] but an objection that the notice is signed by a person having no authority to do so is not waived by an answer asking particulars concerning the pauper.[1] Defects in a notice are waived by the town notified acting upon the notice, paying the costs thereof, and contributing to the support of the pauper.[2]

Authority of officers to waive defects. While it has been held in some jurisdictions that the overseers of the poor have authority to bind the town by their waiver of defects in a notice,[3] and that, if a contract of waiver is made by such officers expressly in behalf of the town, they will not be answerable personally for a breach thereof,[4] in other jurisdictions it has been held that an overseer of the poor is not a general agent of the town,[5] and cannot by his acts preclude the town from asserting the insufficiency of the notice.[6]

[§ 227] (6) New Notice.[7] If the town notified complies with the notice either by paying for the supplies furnished,[8] by removing the pauper,[9] or by otherwise providing for his relief,[10] a new notice is necessary to enable the relieving town to recover for supplies subsequently furnished. A new notice is necessary for each new cause of action, and if the town furnishing supplies sues for them it cannot, without a new notice, recover for expenses incurred after the commencement of the first action.[11] And a new notice is necessary, even though the former action between the same parties in respect of the same pauper is still pending at the commencement of the second suit.[12] If, however, the town receiving notice does not comply therewith, no new notice for after-supplies is necessary, up to the time within which, according to the statute of limitations, action may be brought.[13] Where supplies are furnished occasionally and not continuously, a new notice is not necessary for each new lot of supplies, provided suit is commenced within the statutory period.[14]

[§ 228] (7) Answer to Notice—(a) Necessity and Requisites. It is generally provided by statute that a town upon which a pauper notice has been served must, in order to contest liability, serve an answer upon the notifying town within a period prescribed by the statute.[15] In computing the time for answering the notice,[16] the day on which the notice is given is excluded.[17] The answer is usually required to be in writing,[18] but this requirement may be waived by the overseers of the town giving notice.[19] The answer should be signed by one of the overseers, or selectmen, or by one of their number in behalf of a majority,[20] and an answer signed by some other person will not be sufficient.[21] Even if such defect can be waived, a reply to the answer, sent under the impression that such answer came from the proper officer, is not a waiver.[22] A denial of liability need not follow the statute, but the answer is sufficient if it contains an unequivocal denial of the liability asserted in the notice.[23] If an answer neglects to deny that the settlement of the pauper is in the town notified, that town is estopped, in an action to recover the expenses, to deny that fact.[24] The answer need not contain a denial of the settlement of each individual named in the notice.[25]

Manner of service. Where the answer denying liability is actually received, it is a sufficient service, there being no provision in the statute as to the manner of service.[26]

[§ 229] (b) Effect of Failure To Answer. Where the town notified fails to remove the pauper or answer the notice within a specified time, it is, under some statutes, estopped to deny that the settlement of the pauper is in such town.[27] A notice, not objected to, is a bar to the question of settlement, although the pauper may in fact have no legal settlement within the state.[28] But it has been held that the statute does not preclude the town notified from proving that the pauper's settlement is in the town giving the notice.[29] Nor does failure to reply to the notice estop the town notified from denying that the person to whom the supplies were furnished was a pauper.[30] A notice not sufficiently certain and definite will not, although unanswered, conclude the town notified.[31] And failure to answer a notice respecting a named pauper, "his wife and their children," will not estop the town notified from denying the settlement of the alleged wife and children, where it appears that they are not the wife and children of the pauper named.[32] The estoppel is confined to the notice on which the action to recover for supplies furnished is founded;[33] and, if that action be compromised and another brought on a new notice, the omission to reply to the former notice will not preclude defendant from trying the question of settlement.[34] And where the controversy has proceeded to suit, a notice given by plaintiff town, although unanswered, will not operate as an estoppel.[35]

[§ 230] e. Notice by Individual Furnishing Support. Where the statute authorizes recovery against a town or county liable for a pauper's support by an individual who has furnished supplies or rendered services to the pauper, on giving notice of his condition to the town or county,[36] the giving of such notice is a condition precedent to recovery,[37] and knowledge on the part of the officers of the municipality sought to be made liable will not take the place of such notice,[38] although there is authority to the contrary.[39] In cases of emergency, however, it has been held that the person furnishing the relief may recover from the municipality without a previous notice.[40]

By and to whom notice must be given. The notice must be given by the person furnishing relief to the pauper[41] or by his agent or messenger.[42] A notice to one of the overseers of the poor intended for all of them collectively has been held to be sufficient, although the statute provides for notice to the "overseers;"[43] and where the statute provides for the appointment of a clerk or agent by the overseers, to perform generally such services as they may

[a] Statute construed.—(1) A statute, providing that the town notified shall be barred from contesting the question of settlement in an action brought for expenses incurred for the pauper's "support and removal," estops such town from contesting the settlement in an action brought for the expenses incurred for a pauper's support and "burial." Topsham v. Harpswell, 1 Mass. 518. (2) The estoppel operates only in an action to recover expenses incurred before giving notice, and does not apply to an action for after expenses. Ellsworth v. Houlton, 48 Me. 416; Leicester v. Rehoboth, 4 Mass. 180. (3) Where notice that a person has become a public charge has been given by one town to another, and, no objection being made within the time limited, the town giving the notice has actually removed the pauper to the town to which notice was given, the latter town will be estopped to contest the question of settlement. Marshpee v. Edgartown, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 156; Bridgewater v. Dartmouth, 4 Mass. 273; Leicester v. Rehoboth, supra. (4) A removal, or a reasonable excuse for not making it, is not essential to create the estoppel. Bangor v. Madawaska, 72 Me. 203.

[b] In Iowa the mere notice by one county to another that it is supporting a pauper, and will hold the other responsible, although not replied to in any way, will not estop the county notified from denying the settlement and consequent liability under Code (1873) § 1359, which provides that an order of removal shall be binding on the county to which it is made unless, within thirty days, notice of intended contest be given. Winneshiek County v. Allamakee County, 62 Iowa 558, 17 NW 753.

[c] In Wisconsin it has been held that a notice, although unanswered, does not act as an estoppel as to any material fact, the court in that state not favoring estoppels. Scott v. Clayton, 51 Wis. 185, 195, 8 NW 171, 195 ("The notice . . . only seems necessary for the purpose of giving the town in which the poor person has a settlement notice of the fact that such person is a resident of some other town in which he needs support, so that the former town may provide for such support and relieve itself from any liability to the town in which he may then reside").

impose on him, notice may be given to such clerk or agent.[44]

Form and sufficiency. The notice need not be in writing, unless the statute so requires,[45] but if the statute provides for written notice, oral notice is insufficient.[46] The notice must be an intelligible notice of the pauper's condition and call on the poor officers to take charge of the pauper;[47] and it has been held that information orally given through a third person is sufficient.[48] A notice is sufficient to include the pauper's infant child living with her to the knowledge of the municipal authorities, although such child's name was not specifically mentioned in the notice.[49]

New notice. Where, after notice to the officers of the poor, they furnish supplies deemed sufficient by them, or otherwise provide for the pauper's relief, a new notice is required to enable a person to recover for supplies subsequently becoming necessary.[50]

[§ 231] 3. Application for Relief. According to some decisions, where relief is furnished to a pauper, no special request or application is necessary to the validity of the act of the poor officer in furnishing it,[51] unless required by statute;[52] and where application is required or made, it need not be made by the pauper personally.[53] Application to the individual members of the board of supervisors satisfies a statutory provision that application shall be made to the board of supervisors.[54] Where a pauper is residing in a town other than that in which he has a settlement, application for relief should be made to the poor officers of the town in which he resides,[55] since the duty of providing relief is imposed on them in the first instance.[56]

Rejection of application; review. The right of review where an application for relief is rejected is governed by statute.[57]

[§ 232] 4. Order of Relief and Order of Approval—a. Order of Relief[58]—(1) Necessity. A town or district is not liable, under some statutes, for supplies furnished to a pauper unless an order of relief was obtained from the proper officer before the supplies were furnished,[59] although it is

[a] Rejection of application for blind pension.—(1) The action of the commission for the blind, in rejecting an application for a pension under Act (1923) p 302, is not a judgment, but a ministerial order and therefore § 9 of such act (p 306) is inaccurate in saying that one aggrieved by the action of the commission may "appeal." The evident intention of the legislature was to provide that the circuit court might review the acts of the commission. Shelley v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, 309 Mo. 612, 274 SW 688. (2) Under L. (1923) p 306 § 9, authorizing any person claiming the benefits of the Blind Pension Act to appeal from an adverse decision of the commission for the blind, and Rev. St. (1919) § 1469, authorizing appeal by any party to a suit aggrieved by a judgment of the circuit court, the commission for the blind is authorized to appeal from an adverse judgment of the circuit court, directing it to place on the pension roll the name of one whose application it rejected. Gwaltney v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, (Mo.) 14 SW (2d) 988. (3) Where the applicant filed a petition in the circuit court, after rejection of the application by the commission, for trial de novo, the subsequent appearance of the commissioners, after being duly notified without petitioner's objection, made them proper parties, having the right to appeal from the judgment of the circuit court, they being "aggrieved" by such judgment. Shelley v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, supra. (4) The supreme court alone has jurisdiction of an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court on review of a ruling of the commission for the blind. Shelley v. Missouri Commn. for Blind, supra. (5) Where application is made to a judge of probate, instead of to the commission for the blind, as authorized by the statute, no appeal to the circuit court lies from the decision of the probate judge refusing to grant a certificate that applicant comes within the provisions of the statute. Regan v. Commission for Blind, 219 Mo. A. 330, 271 SW 1014. (6) The fact that, when application is made to a probate judge instead of to the blind commission the commission sends instructions as to how the examination shall be made, and perhaps also sends an oculist, does not take from it the power to consider the merits of the application after the probate judge has acted. [a] In New Jersey when an overseer of the poor provides relief without an order from a justice of the peace, he cannot recover from the town the amount expended. Princeton v. Mount, 29 N. J. L. 299; Bay v. Cook, 22 N. J. L. 343; Smith v. Perth Amboy Tp., 19 N. J. L. 52.

[b] In New York it has been held that, where the overseer in a number of cases, and in good faith, and in ignorance of the existing statute, expended more than ten dollars for the relief of the poor, without first having obtained an order from a justice of the peace allowing the same, and the town auditors allowed the claim for such expenditures, and at an annual town meeting it was resolved that the sum due the overseers for such expenditures be levied and assessed on the taxable property to pay the same, which was duly certified to the board of supervisors and an order for the payment thereof given, the payment of the order so drawn for such expenditures would be enforced. Cobb v. Ramsdell, 14 NYS 93.

[c] In Pennsylvania (1) a township or district is not liable for pauper supplies in ordinary cases in the absence of a previous order of relief. Overseers v. Baker, 2 Watts 280; Kennedy v. La Porte Tp. Poor Dist., 15 Pa. Super. 1; Confer v. Snow Shoe Borough Poor Dist., 23 Pa. Dist. 1070, 42 Pa. Co. 345; Williams v. Mercer County, 4 Pa. Dist. 171, 15 Pa. Co. 525; Delaware Tp. v. Zerbe Tp., 3 Pa. Co. 643. (2) But in emergency cases, a subsequent order of approval is sometimes held that, in cases of emergency, an order of approval made after the relief was furnished will take the place of a previous order of relief.[60]

Discretion of court. The granting or refusal of an order of relief is a judicial act, and rests in the sound discretion of the justices.[61]

[§ 233] (2) Form and Validity. An order of relief, to be valid, must, as to matters of substance, conform strictly to the statute on which it is founded,[62] and where it does not so conform the regularity of the subsequent proceedings is unimportant.[63] Pure matters of form in the order of relief, however, are to be overlooked, and the order liberally treated;[64] and where no formal evidence of a given fact is required by the statute, and such evidence is to be reasonably implied from the order, it is enough.[65] The order of relief must be direct and positive in its terms, and not in the alternative.[66] A rule adopted by the county that no medical supplies shall be furnished any pauper, except on the order of the overseers of the poor, is satisfied by a verbal order merely.[67]

Delegation of power to overseers. The magistrates, in making an order of relief, cannot delegate to the overseers of the poor the power to determine whether the circumstances are such as to render relief necessary.[68]

Disqualification of justice. An order of relief made by a court, one member of which as superintendent of the poor, had applied for the order, is void.[69]

[§ 234] (3) Nature and Extent of Relief.[70] An act providing that the justices are to give such allowance weekly, or otherwise, as the necessities of the pauper shall require[71] gives a reasonable discretion to such justices as to the nature and extent of relief.[72]

[§ 235] (4) Conclusiveness.[73] Where the statute has been strictly followed, an order of relief is conclusive.[74] Where the statute has not been strictly followed, the order is not conclusive,[75] and does not bind the poor district in which the alleged pauper resides,[76] or the district to which he is subsequently removed.[77] The order is conclusive only of the fact that at the time of its use the person therein named is entitled to maintenance as a pauper,[78] but is only prima facie evidence of the continuing necessity of relief.[79] If want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record, it can be taken advantage of at any time and in any court where the conclusiveness of the order is the subject of a judicial inquiry.[80]

[§ 236] (5) Appeal.[81] Unless authorized by statute,[82] no appeal[83] or certiorari[84] lies from an order of relief.

[§ 237] b. Order of Approval. Some statutes have been construed as making a town or district liable for relief extended to a poor person in case of emergency, without a previous order of relief, provided an order of approval is afterward obtained;[85] and this rule has been held applicable to funeral expenses.[86] But unless such subsequent order is obtained, no liability on the part of the town or district arises.[87] If the statute fixes no time within which the order of approval may be obtained, it is not for the court to prescribe the limits.[88] The right to appeal from an order of approval, or from sufficient see infra § 237.

a decision refusing such order, is dependent on the statute.[89]

[§ 238] E. Furnishing Aid and Support in General—1. By Local Authorities[90]—a. Transients. Where a poor district or town has, under its duty to do so, furnished relief to transient persons found sick or otherwise disabled and in need of relief,[91] the town or district extending such relief may recover therefor from the town or district ultimately liable.[92] But it has been held that, in the absence of a statute authorizing reimbursement,[93] a county that has furnished such relief can recover from another county on whom the obligation for support rests only on an express or implied contract to repay.[94]

[§ 239] b. Necessity of Relief.[95] When the act of the poor authorities of a town or county in affording relief to a pauper may affect the rights or obligations of another town or county, the law requires that a case of necessity and need should be established, before the relief is furnished, and those rights or obligations changed.[96] The liability of the town or county sought to be charged for relief furnished to a person by the authorities of another county or town is based on the fact that the person provided for has fallen into distress and stands in need of immediate relief,[97] and does not depend upon the opinion or adjudication of the authorities of the town or county extending relief that such relief was necessary,[98] although, when they act in good faith and with reasonable judgment, "their conclusions will be respected in law,"[99] and where they grant relief it will be presumed that they have made all necessary investigation, and have determined the right of the person to relief.[1] But the fact that a person is actually destitute and in need of relief authorizes and requires the proper poor authorities to provide such relief.[2]

Ownership of property. Where a town in good faith relieves a person in need of assistance, the town of his legal settlement will be liable for the expense although such person has some property of his own not available for his immediate relief,[3] or not suffi-

the time after the giving of the relief, the more difficult it ought to be to satisfy the magistrates that it was not a gratuity, or was not actually given upon the credit of the person." cient to afford necessary support.[4]

Ability of persons liable for support. If the person relieved has a relative liable for his support and able and willing to support him, the town rendering relief cannot enforce a claim therefor against the place of his legal settlement.[5] Where one town is by agreement bound to support a pauper and his wife and the settlement of the children is in another town, the latter will be liable to pay for supplies furnished the children, although the father by his industry is able to support himself and wife, provided he can do no more.[6]

[§ 240] c. Effect of Existence of Provision for Relief.[7] If a town or county has made adequate provision for the relief of a pauper, any relief furnished him by other towns or counties,[8] after knowledge or notice of such prior provision,[9] is deemed to be voluntary, and no action will lie therefor. So a county which maintains a poorhouse is not liable to township trustees for expenses incurred by them in the support of a pauper.[10] But an order of county commissioners for the removal of a county pauper to the poorhouse, which is not complied with because of the pauper's refusal to be removed, does not relieve the county from liability to the town where the pauper resides for support afterward furnished to him upon a new application, a new necessity having arisen.[11]

[§ 241] d. Nature and Extent of Relief.[12] It is only for necessaries that a town or county furnishing relief to a pauper can recover from the town or county ultimately liable.[13] The situation of a pauper admits of such infinite varieties that no arbitrary rule can be laid down as to what constitutes necessaries for him;[14] but generally plaintiff must show that the supplies furnished were, in their nature, suitable and proper under all the circumstances,[15] and that the charges therefor were reasonable in amount.[16] In other words, the nature and extent of relief depends on the facts connected with each call for aid, and must be tested by the reasonableness and propriety of the relief provided;[17] and the determination of the poor law officers, while not final,[18] will be respected.[19]

Items for which recovery may be had. There are certain items, such as medical attendance[20] and nursing,[21] in the case of a sick pauper, the expense of commitment to an asylum[22] and support there,[23] clothing destroyed by an insane pauper, without fault of asylum overseers or keeper,[24] and, in some jurisdictions,[25] but not in others,[26] burial expenses of a pauper, which in their nature are necessaries, and, when reasonable as to amount, a legal charge on the town or county ultimately liable.

Items for which recovery cannot be had. There are other items, such as the expense of the overseers of the poor in providing for the abode and support of a pauper,[27] the services of the overseers of the poor,[28] debts of a pauper, paid at his request,[29] the expense of guarding an insane pauper to prevent injury to third persons,[30] of transporting a pauper to the county poorhouse,[31] and of redeeming a pauper's clothes,[32] which in their nature are not necessaries and therefore not a legal charge.

Removal to, and support in, asylum without the state. The town of a person's settlement is not liable to the town in which such person had fallen into distress for the expense of his removal to, and support in, an asylum in another state, even though a removal to some asylum was necessary to the comfort and relief of the pauper.[33]

[§ 242] e. Necessity That Supplies Furnished Be Pauper Supplies.[34] To authorize recovery against the place of settlement the supplies must have been furnished and received as pauper supplies,[35] and no recovery can be had for aid extended as a gift or loan.[36] But if the supplies are furnished and received as pauper supplies, they will be so regarded, notwithstanding a promise by the recipient to repay, followed by actual repayment.[37]

[§ 243] 2. By Individuals—a. Unauthorized and Voluntary Aid. There is no liability on the part of a town or poor district to reimburse a third person who voluntarily affords relief to a pauper,[38] even though there is an immediate necessity for relief before the poor officers can be communicated with,[39] and no action therefor will lie by him against the town or district,[40] unless it is expressly given by statute[41] or is founded on an express or implied contract.[42]

[§ 244] b. After Notice to Town of Pauper's Condition.[43] It has been held that a person who relieves a pauper may recover therefor from the town or poor district legally bound to furnish such relief, where the town or district, after notice of the pauper's need, refuses or neglects to extend relief,[44] although there is authority to the contrary.[45] A right of action is sometimes expressly given by stat-

[a] "The solution of this question must depend upon the nature of the obligation, which rests upon a township to support its poor. If it be merely in the nature of a moral obligation, then no action can be maintained, unless there has been a previous request, or an express promise on the part of the township. But if, on the other hand, it be an absolute legal obligation, then the law implies a promise, and an action can be sustained. We are of opinion that it is of this latter description. The supreme power of the state, by legislative enactment, has imposed the obligation. It is of as much binding force as the obligation of a parent to support his child, or a husband his wife. We do not say that in every case, where an individual furnishes necessaries to a pauper, he can maintain an action against the township. Complaint must in the first instance be made to the overseers of the poor. If these neglect their duty, or if the trustees of the township refuse to make the necessary order, it is right and proper for an individual to furnish a distressed pauper with the necessary relief; and justice, sound policy, and law, require that the individual performing this benevolent act should be remunerated." Cincinnati Tp. v. Ogden, 5 Oh. 23, 27.

45. Patrick v. Baldwin, 109 Wis. 342, 85 NW 274, 53 LRA 613 [overr Davis v. Scott, 59 Wis. 604, 18 NW 530; Mappes v. Iowa County, 47 Wis. 31, 1 NW 359].

[a] Where the law imposes upon a municipality the duty of maintaining poor persons, and designates officers thereof to act in its behalf in the performance of such duty, their mere neglect will not operate as an implied request as to a private party to supply the needy person's wants, upon which such party can act, and hold the municipality liable as upon ute when the town or district neglects or refuses to render aid after notice of the necessity therefor.[46] The fact that the person incurring expense is indebted to the pauper will not preclude him from recovering from the town the full amount of expense incurred.[47]

Necessity of relief.[48] An individual furnishing support must show that the person provided for was a pauper or in need of relief before he can recover, from the town or district, the expenses incurred.[49]

Persons by and to whom relief furnished. Where the right to recover of towns for supplies furnished to paupers after notice to the poor officers is restricted to inhabitants of the town wherein the relief is furnished,[50] no recovery can be had by one who is not such an inhabitant.[51] Nor can recovery be had by one who, at the time of furnishing relief, was under legal obligation to do so.[52]

Support by relatives. A person liable under the statute for the support of a needy relative[53] cannot recover for support furnished unless it appears that the person provided for was destitute and in need of immediate relief,[54] and that plaintiff was financially incapable of supporting him.[55]

Place of furnishing relief. No recovery can be had for relief furnished to a pauper outside of the town sought to be charged, the remedy being against the town where the pauper is found in distress and the relief is furnished.[56] But this rule does not apply to relief furnished to a pauper whom the town officers have removed temporarily to a place outside of its territorial limits.[57]

Nature and extent of relief.[58] The town is liable to the individual for all necessary relief furnished after notice, including the care of the pauper when ill,[59] medical expenses incurred by plaintiff,[60] although not actually paid,[61] and expenses of burial,[62] even where the pauper's relatives claim his body.[63]

[§ 245] c. Effect of Existence of Provision for Relief.[64] A town or poor district which has made adequate provision for the relief of a pauper is not liable for his care and support by an individual[65] having knowledge of the provision for relief.[66] So, where a town or poor district provides adequate relief for the pauper after notice from an individual, it cannot be held liable to such individual for addi-an implied contract. Patrick v. Baldwin, 109 Wis. 342, 85 NW 274, 53 LRA 613 [overr Davis v. Scott, 59 Wis. 604, 18 NW 530; Mappes v. Iowa County, 47 Wis. 31, 1 NW 359].

"The party in whose charge, or under whose care, the poor person is, shall not be compelled to turn him forth without relief, nor to bear, himself, a burden which the town ought and is by law required to bear." Smith v. Colerain, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 492, 496.

[a] "This is a provision designed to carry into its fullest effect the policy of the law, itself the plain dictate of common humanity, that in a civilized community no human being shall be exposed to the danger of death, or extreme suffering from hunger, nakedness, or want of shelter. For this purpose, the overseers being always present, are made the almoners of the public charity in the first instance, that the relief may be as prompt as the exigency demands. If such town is that of the pauper's settlement, the burden ultimately rests where it first falls. If the pauper has a settlement in any other town, they have their remedy against such other town for reimbursement; if no other town is liable, the state takes upon itself the duty of such reimbursement. But as overseers might from some cause delay affording the immediate necessary relief, and to make it sure that it shall be done, the section above cited provides that any person after notice and request to the overseers, may do it, and hold such town liable." Shearer v. Shelburne, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 3, 4.

[b] The town notified is bound to take steps to ascertain the settlement of the pauper, and, in the event of failure to do so, will be required to recoup the person by whom the notice is given and who has furnished the pauper with necessary support. Bushby v. North Sydney, 46 N. S. 549, 9 DomLR 24, 12 EastLR 183.

[c] Support in asylum.—(1) Under Pub. St. § 3670, as to the care of transient persons, if a transient becomes insane and is in the care of an individual, such individual may, after notice to the town, contract for the care of the transient in an insane asylum, without losing his right to recover for a reasonable outlay for such care. tional supplies furnished by him.[67] But if the pauper is too ill to bear removal to the place provided for his relief by the poor officers after such notice, the person giving the notice may continue to relieve him and recover therefor from the town or poor district;[68] and a like rule applies where the pauper, being a minor of tender age, is not reasonably able to reach the place provided for him.[69] An offer to remove the pauper to the poorhouse, made by one overseer of the poor, without authority from the other overseers, will not relieve the town from liability.[70] Nor can a town escape liability because it had contracted to have the relief afforded by one who failed so to do.[71]

[§ 246] F. Liability for Medical Services[72]—1. In General. A physician who renders medical services to the poor of a county or town is entitled to recover therefor where such services were performed under employment by officers having requisite authority to contract,[73] or were subsequently ratified by them.[74] But there can be no recovery if the officers are without authority,[75] or fraudulently approve a claim for services.[76] A statute making a town liable for relief furnished to a pauper after notice to, and refusal of, the town to provide relief[77] applies to a physician who renders medical services to a sick pauper.[78] Where the statute specifically provides what persons county officers are bound to relieve, and the nature of the services for which the county shall be liable, no recovery can be had for medical services not rendered in accordance with the terms of the statute.[79]

Necessity of relief. Where a municipality is liable for medical services only where the person for whom they are rendered is incapable of providing such services, it is not sufficient that the person treated is execution proof, or insolvent within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act.[80] furnish other services.[83] The above rule[84] also has been held to prevent recovery for medical services voluntarily rendered even where an emergency existed,[85] if, as held in some cases, there had been no judicial ascertainment that the person treated was a pauper,[86] even though such services were requested by a member of the board of supervisors.[87]

Contrary to the rule above stated as to emergency cases,[88] it has been held by some authorities that a town or poor district upon which the duty to relieve paupers is imposed is liable for medical attendance furnished to a pauper without notice to, or request from, the officers of the poor, where immediate action is required,[89] provided, as held in some jurisdictions, an order of approval is subsequently obtained.[90]

[§ 248] 3. Effect of Existence of Provisions for Relief.[91] A town is not liable for services rendered to a pauper by a physician with knowledge that the overseers of the poor had already employed a physician to attend the pauper.[92] And where a town or city has provided for the medical treatment of its sick paupers by the election of a town or city physician, it is not liable for services rendered by a physician under employment by the overseers of the poor.[93] So a county which has employed a physician to render aid to the poor is not liable for medical services rendered by a physician employed by township trustees.[94] It has also been held that the statutory liability of a county for medical services furnished to persons falling ill within the county and without means with which to pay for such services is not affected by the fact that there is a poorhouse in the county for the care of paupers, such persons not being paupers within the meaning of the statute.[95] On the other hand it has been held that, where a statute provides that paupers shall be maintained at the county poorhouse, or at such place as the county commissioners shall agree upon, the county cannot be held liable for the care of sick and indigent persons, unless there is a contract by the county officers, or unless the services are rendered by request and under circumstances from which a contract can be inferred.[96] But a physician employed by township trustees to render aid to a pauper may recover therefor when the regular county physician is under no obligation to attend the township poor,[97] or is incompetent,[98] or inconvenient of access.[99] It has been held that a surgeon performing an operation on an indigent person in an emergency case, at the instance of an overseer of the poor, may recover for his services from the county, although the statute provides for surgical operations and hospital treatment of poor persons afflicted with certain deformities or maladies.[1]

[§ 249] 4. Nature of Services. The nature of medical services for which recovery may be had against a municipality depends upon the statute pursuant to which recovery is sought,[2] and the contract under which the services were rendered.[3] The rules

"It is true that the obligations to provide for the poor are statutory. These, as we have indicated, are matters of regulation; but, where there can be no regulation from the very nature of the case, it must be that necessity will supersede the exercise of statutory authority, and immediate aid for the sick person should be furnished. A deprivation of it might inure not only to injure the poor person, but to the detriment of the public, for delay in the treatment of the injured party might entail added pecuniary burdens." Robbins v. Homer, supra.

[a] Illustration.—A county is liable for services furnished to a pauper by a physician, although the physician acted without the request or consent of the county board, where there was an immediate necessity for such aid, and the board was not in session at the time, so that notice could not be given to the board before the services were rendered. [a] Vaccination.—Under Acts (1864) c 269 county commissioners are bound to pay the physician for every child vaccinated by him, where the guardian or parents are too poor to pay, and it is immaterial whether the child was vaccinated upon the suggestion or invitation of the physician or not. Allegany County v. McClintock, 60 Md. 559.

3. See infra § 250.

governing medical services[4] apply to the services of a person employed to nurse and watch a sick person,[5] and a nurse so employed is not required to ascertain whether the patient is in need of such services.[6] So a physician employed to perform a surgical operation may recover for services rendered by an assistant engaged by him to aid in the operation.[7]

Extraordinary services. Poor law officers have no authority to bind the town or county for extraordinary services, such as the conduct of a post mortem examination, or the treatment of a pauper for habitual drunkenness.[8]

[§ 250] 5. Form, Requisites, and Construction of Contracts for Services.[9] To entitle a physician to recover from a town or county for medical services rendered to a poor person a valid contract of employment must be shown.[10] The contract need not be in writing,[11] and may be implied.[12] An implied contract arises where the services are rendered at the request of officers authorized to contract therefor,[13] or, in some jurisdictions, without any previous request, where the services were rendered in an emergency case.[14]

Legality. A contract made by a county board of health for services of one of its members is against public policy,[15] and no action can be maintained thereon for services rendered,[16] although it seems that the physician performing such services might recover on a quantum meruit their reasonable value.[17] It has been held that neither the failure of a physician, contracting with a county to furnish medical attendance to the county poor, to give a bond as required by statute,[18] nor the fact that the contract was not let under competitive bidding,[19] will invalidate the contract.

Indemnity against contingent liability. A contract by a county board to pay a specified sum to a physician who agrees to furnish medical services for the poor as county physician, and to satisfy all claims against the county for medicines, nurses, assistants, and surgical operations, is in the nature of insurance against such claims and is unauthorized.[20]

Rules of construction and operation applicable to other contracts for medical services,[21] and contracts generally,[22] are applicable to contracts of this kind.[23] The term "medical treatment"[24] or "duties of a physician,"[25] as used in such contracts, includes the usual cases of surgery as well as the administration of medicine.

[§ 251] G. Contracts for Support[26]—1. Requisites and Validity. Except where a statute makes provision for such support, a town or county can be held liable to third persons for the support of its paupers only by contract,[27] made by properly authorized officers[28] in the manner prescribed by law.[29] The terms of such contracts must be within the powers conferred by the pauper statutes,[30] and must not, of course, violate any provision of the constitution.[31] Contracts for support may be either

State v. Hindson, 44 Mont. 429, 120 P 485. (2) Under Rev. Codes § 2054, as amended by L. [a] Rule applied.—A contract by the board of commissioners for the care of the "poor" at a certain price per capita, and for the care of the "sick and infirm" at another price per capita, was void where the only contract authorized by the statute was one for the care of such persons as were poor and therewith sick and infirm. Lebcher v. Custer County, 9 Mont. 315, 23 P 713.

[b] Contract of proper officials for support of pauper outside of county of his residence is not ultra vires as against a statute that paupers shall be supported at the place of residence. Moden v. Van Buren County Superintendents of Poor, 183 Mich. 120, 149 NW 1064.

[a] The power of the mayor and council of a city, under Acts (1901) p 491 § 39, to contract with a third person for the support of the paupers of the city must be exercised so as express or implied.[32]

Implied contracts. If relief be afforded at the request of officers authorized to contract therefor, an implied contractual obligation on the part of the town or county to pay for such relief arises.[33] So one who furnishes aid to a person, at the request of the authorities of the town in which such person temporarily falls into distress, may recover therefor from the town of the relieved person's residence.[34] But no promise can be implied to pay expenses which the poor officers are not authorized to incur.[35] In some jurisdictions it has been held that an implied contract arises to reimburse an individual for support furnished to a pauper when the town or district fails to provide relief after notice of the pauper's condition from the person furnishing support.[36]

Consideration. A contract for the support of a pauper requires a valid consideration to support it the same as any other contract.[37]

Indemnity against contingent liability. A town may indemnify itself by contract against a contingent liability of furnishing supplies to a pauper,[38] regardless of whether he is in present need[39] or whether he knows that he is receiving pauper supplies.[40]

Contract with person to be supported. Where there is a possibility that an aged woman might become a public charge, a contract made by overseers of the poor in behalf of the town, to support such person for life in consideration of a conveyance by her of her property to the town, is valid,[41] and where such contract is performed, it is binding on the grantor's heirs.[42]

[§ 252] 2. Construction, Operation, and Rescission. Usual rules governing the construction of contracts[43] are applicable to contracts for the support of paupers.[44] Where a person contracts for the support of all the poor of a town or county for a stipulated period, he is liable for the support of all transient paupers chargeable to such town or county, and of all paupers having their legal settlement therein residing elsewhere, the burden of whose support is ultimately cast upon such town or county.[45] Under such a contract no liability exists on either side for the support of persons not paupers.[46] Nor can one who has bid off the keeping of a county poorhouse at a certain sum for each pauper recover for paupers supported by the county outside such poorhouse.[47] Where a person has performed his engagement in part, and has been prevented from fulfilling it by inevitable accident, he is entitled to compensation for the part performed, on an implied promise.[48]

Duration. Where one contracts to support a pauper for a certain period, he is under no obligation to support him for a longer period.[49] But if he continues the support of a pauper after the expiration of the period covered by his contract, without a renewal thereof, the town is not liable on the ground of failure to remove the pauper at the end of the time limited by the contract.[50] Where the overseer promises to pay for the keeping of a pauper until he removes him from plaintiff's care, the obligation not to violate Const. art 1 § 1 par 14, relative to the use of public money in aid of sectarian institutions. Bennett v. La Grange, 153 Ga. 428, 112 SE 482.

[b] Contract held constitutional.—A contract by officers of the poor for the support of pauper colored children in a home incorporated for the care and maintainance of destitute or orphan colored children, and maintained by voluntary contributions by the public, does not violate a constitutional provision prohibiting the appropriation of municipal funds, or the lending of a municipality's credit to a corporation, etc. Colored Children's Home v. [a] Death of pauper.—Where a person entered into a contract with a town to support a pauper for one year, at the rate of one dollar a week, and the pauper died within the year, it was held that the express contract was dissolved by the death of the pauper, and that the person contracted with was entitled to recover a compensation for supporting the pauper until his death, upon an implied promise. Willington v. West Boylston, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 101.

50. Smith v. Colerain, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 492; Castelman v. Miner, 8 Vt. 209; Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441.

[a] Removal of pauper from town during life of contract.—(1) Where one under contract with a town to support a pauper for a year removes the pauper during the year to another town, such removal does not terminate the contract, and the town, not having taken the pauper back, is liable for his support until the end of the year (Newton v. Waterford, 67 Vt. 372, 31 A 782; Durfey v. Worcester, 63 Vt. 418, 22 A 609); (2) but the town is not liable for support furnished the pauper after the expiration of the year, since it is plaintiff's duty to return the pauper at the

of the town to pay continues in force until such removal,[51] and the fact that the overseer came to plaintiff's home with the intention to remove the pauper, and went away without doing so, saying that he would never come again, is immaterial, when plaintiff did nothing to prevent the removal.[52]

Rescission. Where a contract is made for the support of the poor of a town or county for an indefinite period, payment for such support to be made at stipulated periods, either party to the contract may rescind it at the expiration of such stipulated period.[53]

[§ 253] H. Services and Earnings of Pauper—1. Right Thereto—a. Of Town. Municipalities called upon to support paupers have a right to their services and earnings to aid in their support,[54] and the inmates of poorhouses, etc., may be required to labor for the establishment to a reasonable extent.[55] But a town is not entitled to the earnings of a minor child, not a pauper,[56] although his parent is a pauper and is maintained by the town.[57]

Slaves. A person who had used the services of a negro as a reputed slave was held not to be liable to the town which subsequently supported the negro as a pauper, for the value of his services while in such person's service.[58]

[§ 254] b. Of Persons Becoming Liable for Support by Contract with Town. Any person who may have become liable for the support of a pauper by virtue of a contract with the town is entitled to his moderate services and the benefits thereof.[59]

[§ 255] c. Of Pauper. A person having a right to ordinary and moderate services from a pauper by virtue of a contract with the town may bind himself by special contract to pay him wages for particular services,[60] and it is too late for such person, after entering into a special contract with a pauper, and after the latter has performed the contract, to contend that he had a right to all the pauper's services.[61] So if the keeper of a county poorhouse employs one of the paupers therein for his individual benefit, upon a promise of compensation, he is liable in an action for work and labor performed.[62] But where the value of the services performed for the town exceeds the amount expended for his relief, the pauper cannot recover the excess in an action against the town for work and labor,[63] unless there are special circumstances warranting recovery.[64]

[§ 256] 2. Settlement and Adjustment of Rights. An overseer of the poor having power to make a valid contract as to the pauper's services has the right to settle and adjust all disputes that may arise concerning it,[65] and, in the absence of fraud, a settlement made between the overseer and the other contracting party is conclusive.[66]

[§ 257] I. Support in Poorhouses[67]—1. In General. Unless the statute expressly confers on overseers of the poor the power so to do, they cannot remove and maintain a poor person, against his will, in a poorhouse outside of the poor district to which such poor person belongs.[68] Under the statutes in some jurisdictions paupers may be sent to, and kept in, the county poorhouse at the expense of the county,[69] if the provisions of the statutes as to the persons to be admitted[70] and the proceedings prelimi-

McLees v. Hale, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 426. (2) An order, made by the wardens of the poor of a county, that a particular sum should be allowed and placed in the hands of A, payable semiannually, for the benefit of a pauper, was repealable within the time of the first half year, although A had proceeded under such order to purchase provisions for the whole year, and he was held only entitled to one-half yearly installment. [a] In Indiana (1) 1 Rev. St. p 405 § 24 makes it the duty of the overseers of the poor to grant temporary relief to persons not inhabitants of their township, lying sick therein or in distress without money or friends. Section 13 provides that, whenever any person entitled to temporary relief as a pauper shall be in any township in which he has not a legal settlement, the overseers of the poor thereof may grant such relief by placing him temporarily in the poorhouse of such county. It was held that persons entitled to relief, under § 24, may be properly placed in the county poorhouse for relief. Reiniche v. Allen County, 20 Ind. 243. (2) But such statute was not intended to require that residents, needing temporary relief, should necessarily be removed to the poorhouse before receiving relief. Bartholomew County v. Wright, 22 Ind. 187.

nary to admission[71] are complied with.

Liability of pauper and his estate.[72] It has been held that, where a person is duly admitted into the county poorhouse and supported there, pursuant to statute, the county cannot recover the value of such support either upon an express[73] or implied[74] contract, unless such recovery is authorized by statute;[75] and the fact that the pauper owned property at the time of his admission will not render his estate liable in the absence of affirmative evidence of deception on his part as to his need of relief.[76] On the other hand it has been held that a county may recover from the estate of an inmate of the county poor farm for support furnished after the time he became financially able to support himself.[77] But it has been held that a pauper inmate is under no obligation, after coming into possession of funds, to pay for support furnished prior to that time,[78] and payment by him in settlement of the county's claim is without consideration.[79] In the absence of statute, however, the pauper has no right of action against the county to recover back the sum so paid.[80]

Liability of pauper's relatives.[81] In some jurisdictions it has been held that, under a statute authorizing recovery against a pauper's relatives for money expended in his relief, a county may recover from such relatives money expended for relief at a poor farm.[82] The fact that the pauper was admitted to the poor farm without formal written order,[83] or without the making of any record in relation thereto,[84] will not relieve the relative from liability for his support therein.

[§ 258] 2. State Almshouses. The town of a pauper's settlement is not liable for the expenses of his support at a state almshouse[85] unless the statute so provides.[86]

[§ 259] J. Support in Asylums[87]—1. Local Authorities Liable. The support of insane paupers committed to the state asylum is usually imposed by statute upon the towns or poor districts in which they had their settlement,[88] or, where an insane pauper is committed from a town or poor district other than that of his settlement, it is made directly liable for his support, with the right to recover therefor from the town or district in which the pauper has his settlement.[89] Where the insane pauper has Pomeroy v. Wells, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 406.

[b] Refusal of steward of poorhouse to receive pauper.—Where the provision of the statute with regard to proceedings fixing the settlement of a pauper and his commitment to the poorhouse have been substantially complied with, the refusal of the steward of the poorhouse to receive such pauper amounts to a waiver of his actual delivery to him by the overseer of the poor of the town, and the county thereby becomes charged with the expense of thereafter maintaining him. Connecticut Insane Hospital v. Brookfield, 69 Conn. 1, 36 A 1017. (2) The object of the statute was to put the pauper, as soon as possible, into a hospital where he could secure proper treatment, and the humane purpose of the legislature might often be defeated if only a selectman of that town, perhaps a distant one, where the pauper statedly resided, or to which he was legally chargeable as a settled inhabitant, could act. Connecticut Insane Hospital v. Brookfield, supra.

no settlement within the state, the liability for his support is in some jurisdictions imposed upon the state,[90] and in others upon the county, town, or poor district in which he resides or from which he is committed.[91]

Notice to fix liability.[92] Where the statute gives a town a right to reimbursement for expenses incurred in the support of a pauper in an asylum, upon giving notice to the town of the pauper's settlement,[93] the giving of proper and timely notice to the town of settlement is a condition precedent to the right of action to recover such expenses,[94] unless notice is waived.[95] But in the absence of any provision for notice none need be given.[96]

[§ 260] 2. Validity of Commitment. The proceedings for the commitment of a pauper must show a substantial compliance with the statute,[97] and where such commitment is irregular, the expenses of the pauper's commitment and maintenance in the asylum cannot be recovered from the place of his settlement.[98] Under some statutes a commitment by overseers of the poor without an adjudication by any court or magistrate is irregular, so that the town cannot recover the cost of the lunatic's support from the place of his settlement.[99] In other jurisdictions such a commitment is within the meaning of the statute, and a recovery is permitted.[1]

Commitment to asylum or home for children. The rule of nonliability for the support of a pauper in an asylum, where the commitment thereto is invalid,[2] applies where one town seeks to recover from another town the expenses of supporting a child committed to a home or institution for destitute children.[3] In some jurisdictions, counties are made

[c] In New Jersey the county in which a lunatic in indigent circumstances, but not a pauper actually resides when he is sent to the asylum is primarily liable for his support, without reference to his settlement under the poor laws, and cannot look to any other county for reimbursement. [d] In Pennsylvania (1) a hospital may recover for the support of an insane pauper either from the city or county from which the pauper was sent, or from the township to which he is chargeable. State Hospital v. Bellefonte Borough, 163 Pa. 175, 29 A 901. (2) The courts may determine where insane paupers shall be kept, and where an insane pauper is placed in the state lunatic hospital, the county is primarily liable for the expense of care, maintenance, and removal, with the right to recover from the township or poor district within which such pauper had a settlement at the time of commitment. St. c 53 §§ 1–3, the expenses of the pauper are chargeable in the first instance to the town in which he is committed, to be recovered, however, from the town of his legal settlement when that is ascertained. It was held that, where a pauper lunatic was sent to an insane asylum by an overseer of the town instead of by a justice of the peace, such town is liable for the expense, and cannot have reimbursement from the town of the pauper's settlement. [§ 261] K. Support in Reformatories and Prisons or Jails—1. Reformatories.[6] In the absence of statute,[7] there can be no liability on the town where a person had his last legal settlement to pay the county for his maintenance in a reformatory.[8] By statutes in some jurisdictions the town where a pauper, committed to the house of correction, has his legal settlement is made liable to the master of such house of correction for the expense of his support.[9] Under such a statute the town in which the pauper has a settlement at the time the expense of his support is incurred is liable therefor, although he gains a settlement in another town before the account of such expense is audited and certified by the overseers of the house of correction.[10] Nor is the town of a pauper's settlement relieved from liability for his support by the neglect of such overseers to perform their statutory duty of establishing rules to govern the persons committed, of providing the materials for their employment, and of keeping account thereof.[11] But the town of a pauper's settlement is not liable for his support in the house of correction, unless the account thereof be audited and certified by the overseers of such house within the time prescribed by the statute.[12] Under some statutes the town from which an inmate of the reformatory was committed may recover for his support from the town of his legal settlement.[13]

[§ 262] 2. Prisons or Jails.[14] The keeper of a prison or jail has no right of action against a town for the support of a prisoner, independently of statute or contract.[15] But some statutes give a right of action against the town where the offense was committed,[16] while others impose on the town where the jail is situated the duty in the first instance to support a prisoner, when in need thereof, and give it the right to reimbursement from the town of his legal settlement.[17] But a town which has paid for the support of a criminal in its workhouse, without being liable to do so, cannot recover therefor from the town of his settlement.[18]

Liability after notice. A person confined in jail is regarded as a pauper within the meaning of a statute requiring that every town shall be liable for any expense which shall be incurred for the relief of any pauper by any inhabitant, not liable by law for his support, after notice and request made to the overseers of such town, and until provision made for him.[19] The provision of the statute to this effect has been held in some jurisdictions applicable

The Elementary Education Act of 1870 provides: "The term 'parent' includes guardian and every person who is liable to maintain or has the actual custody of any child." It was held that the words "liable to maintain" in the act of 1870 had no application to a board of guardians, who were liable to provide poor law relief for a deaf pauper child, and that, where such a child had been boarded out by school authority, the guardians were not included under the term "parent" in Act (1893) § 9, and were not liable to contribute as such toward the expenses of the child. [a] Statute construed.—Under Gen. L. § 4222, imposing ultimate liability for support of poor prisoners on the town where the offense was committed, the word "offense" means the act that gives rise to the cause of action for which the offender is jailed, and hence a jailer must bring an action for the support of prisoners, one of whom was confined for timber cutting, and another on a bastardy charge, pursuant to Gen. L. § 3618, against the respective towns wherein the offense was committed, and not against the town where the jail was located. Smith v. Rutland, 99 Vt. 183, 130 A 714.

St. c 203 § 20, his town is not liable for his support as a pauper, since he is a criminal whose support during confinement is first to be borne by the county, under the express provisions of Pub. St. c 220 §§ 53, 54, relating to the expense of supporting prisoners, the liability of a town for the support of prisoners having a settlement therein being limited to those sentenced for stealing property less than five dollars in value, under Pub. Liability to individual after notice to persons detained in jail on civil process,[20] but not to persons confined on criminal process.[21]

[§ 263] 3. Validity of Commitment. It has been held in some jurisdictions that the invalidity of the commitment of a person to a reformatory or workhouse is a defense to an action against the town to enforce its liability for his support while there,[22] but in others it has been held that actual commitment is sufficient to fix such liability, although the commitment was unlawful.[23]

[§ 264] L. Actions against Municipalities for Supplies, Services, and Expenditures[24]—1. Right of Action—a. By Town or County. As the liability of municipalities for the support of paupers is purely statutory,[25] one municipality furnishing relief to a pauper, the duty to support whom is imposed upon another municipality, cannot, in the absence of statutory provision, recover the cost thereof from the latter;[26] and it has been held that action for reimbursement cannot be maintained on a general statutory provision declaring it to be the duty of a town or county to support its own paupers,[27] although some authorities have held that such a statutory provision imposes on a town or county a legal obligation which, if it refuses to discharge it, gives a right of action to another town or county furnishing such support for reimbursement,[28] and the fact that plaintiff municipality had not actually paid for the supplies is immaterial, the liability to pay for them being sufficient.[29] On the other hand it has been held that, where the overseers of a town have committed to a hospital an insane person belonging to another town, a right of action to recover the expenses of maintenance therein does not accrue until the amount due to the hospital is paid.[30] A right of action for reimbursement is frequently given by express provision of statute.[31] A town is not the less entitled to recover the amount expended because it will inure to the benefit of a contractor who by agreement furnished the supplies.[32] Nor is the right of recovery affected by the residence of the pauper during the pendency of this action.[33]

Recovery of money paid under mistake. An action ordinarily will lie by one town to recover money voluntarily paid to another town to reimburse it for the support of a pauper under the mistaken belief that it was liable for such support.[34]

[§ 265] b. By Individuals.[35] As previously stated, an individual furnishing support or other relief to a pauper has a right of action against the town or poor district liable for the relief of the pauper when, and only when, such right of action is expressly conferred by statute or is founded on an express or implied contract.[36]

[§ 266] 2. Nature and Form of Remedy.[37] The particular remedy provided by statute for the recovery by one town or poor district for relief extended to a pauper whose place of settlement is in another town or district is usually held to be exclusive,[38] although, on the other hand, it has been held that a statute providing a particular mode of redress in a summary way does not take away the common-law remedy.[39] But unless another remedy is expressly provided by statute, assumpsit will lie against the town or district of the pauper's settlement.[40] So if the remedy given by statute is inadequate, plaintiff may resort to the means of redress given by the common law.[41]

Where two statutory remedies are not antagonistic, both may exist at the same time.[42]

42. Park County v. Jefferson County, 12 Colo. 585, 21 P 912; Woodstock v. Hartland, 21 Vt. 563.

[a] Where a debtor is committed to jail, and receives support therein from the town in which the jail is situated, although it should be conceded that such prisoner has relatives of sufficient ability, from whom the jail might recover the amount of their expenditures for his support by petition under the statute, yet this will not preclude them from also maintaining an action for money paid, which is also given by statute,

[§ 267] 3. Conditions Precedent—a. In General. The liability of towns and counties for the support of the poor is purely statutory,[43] and unless the statutory prerequisites[44] are complied with, there can be no recovery, however equitable the claim,[45] although substantial compliance has been held sufficient.[46] But compliance with statutory prerequisites to an action to recover for support is not necessary in order to maintain an action to recover back money voluntarily paid by one town to another for the support of a pauper, under the mistaken belief that it was liable for such support.[47]

Presentation of claim. Unless the pauper laws so declare, a claim for relief furnished need not be presented to the town or city liable therefor in order to maintain an action for reimbursement,[48] and a special statute providing for the presentation of claims against defendant city must yield to the pauper statute, which is general and uniform in its application.[49]

Itemizing claims. It is not necessary that a claim presented to one town by another for expense incurred in the support of a pauper should be itemized unless the pauper statutes so provide.[50] So where a town employs a person to relieve a pauper, it is not a prerequisite to an action by such town against the town of the pauper's settlement that the claim against plaintiff town by the person so employed be itemized.[51]

Recourse against pauper's relatives. A town suing the town of a pauper's settlement or residence for his support need not first assert its claim against the pauper's relatives.[52] On the other hand, it has been held that a county is not liable to a town therein for the support of a person who has a relative in the county liable for his support, and able to furnish the same, where the town made no demand on such relative to comply with his legal obligation.[53]

Recourse against pauper's estate. Where a person has property inadequate for his needs, an individual extending relief to him need not, before presenting his demand against the county for such proportion of the demand as the county would ultimately be liable for, exhaust the pauper's estate.[54]

[§ 268] b. Certificate of Correctness of Charges. In some jurisdictions the statute requires as a condition precedent to the recovery of expenses incurred for pauper supplies that all such claims and bills shall be certified to be correct by the proper officers of the poor of the town or county sought to be charged.[55] This certificate partakes of a judicial character, and is binding on the county in the absence of fraud.[56]

Waiver of certificate or defects therein. The board of county supervisors may waive the certificate, if satisfied of the truth of all such a certificate would show,[57] where the relief furnished is on behalf of another county, as where it is furnished to one having a settlement in that county.[58] A defect in the certificate may likewise be waived by the board of supervisors.[59]

[§ 269] 4. Defenses[60]—a. To Action by Town or County. In an action by one town against another to recover for pauper supplies, a deliberate and voluntary settlement, made without misrepresentation

60. Estoppel to deny settlement or concealment, is conclusive between the parties.[61] The only effect of the failure of defendant town to answer within the statutory period a notice given by plaintiff town of supplies furnished a person is to estop the former to deny the place of the pauper's settlement; it is not estopped to deny that the person to whom the supplies were furnished was in need of immediate relief.[62] Nor will support of a pauper estop a town from contesting the question of its liability for his support.[63] And a poor district is not precluded from defending a suit brought by a county to recover for the support of a pauper on the ground that he did not reside in the district.[64] It is no defense that the application to the town for aid was not under the oath of two credible persons, as provided by law,[65] or that a town not chargeable with a pauper's support agreed with the town by which he had been maintained to pay for his support for a specific period,[66] or that plaintiff had previously given notice to another town, and claimed the same sum as that in suit,[67] or that since the commencement of the suit plaintiff town had claimed and received from the county pay for the same supplies,[68] or that a marriage, upon which the question of settlement turned, was invalid.[69] Nor can the determination of the town of the pauper's residence not to support him while in another town, uncommunicated to the latter town, be set up as a defense.[70]

Failure to remove pauper to place of settlement. When a city in which a pauper is legally settled, with knowledge that he is receiving relief from another municipality, disclaims responsibility and is unwilling to receive the pauper, the failure of the authorities of the place furnishing the relief to return him to his place of settlement is no defense in an action to recover the sums expended for such relief.[71]

[§ 270] b. To Action by Individuals. In an action by an individual against a town or county to recover for supplies furnished to a pauper, the fact that such person persuaded the pauper to return to defendant town in which he had a legal settlement, for the purpose of compelling such town to support him, is no defense.[72] Where an action is brought against a city on a contract for nursing and caring for a poor person, the city cannot set up the defense that its offer to pay for the services rendered was refused by plaintiff,[73] or that plaintiff agreed to look to a third person for payment, where there was no consent by such third person to the attempted substitution of debtors.[74]

[§ 271] 5. Jurisdiction and Venue. The particular court or courts in which actions to recover for the support of paupers shall or may be brought,[75] and the venue of such actions,[76] are matters of statutory regulations.

[§ 272] 6. Time To Sue, Limitations, and Laches. A town is not required to wait until it has stopped furnishing relief to a pauper before bringing action against the town ultimately liable.[77] Nor is a town furnishing relief to a pauper whose settlement is in defendant town compelled to wait until it is determined whether the pauper acquires a settlement in plaintiff town by reimbursing the cost of such relief within the statutory period from the time it is furnished.[78] Where the town of a pauper settlement is required to answer, within a specified time, a notice given by another town furnishing relief to a pauper,[79] an action by the relieving town against the town notified, commenced before the expiration of the time allowed for answering the notice is premature;[80] but if an answer is returned, denying liability, an action may be commenced immediately.[81] In some jurisdictions special statutes of limitations have been enacted for actions for the recovery of expenses incurred by a town in the relief of a pauper, against the town ultimately liable,[82]

[a] In Ohio (1) where township trustees furnish necessary temporary support to a pauper whose legal settlement is in a township in another county, an action to recover therefor may be brought in the court of common pleas of the county in which the support was furnished, provided the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Jerome Tp. v. Darby Tp., 2 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 685, 4 WestLMonth 586. (2) The directors of a county infirmary may bring an action for expenses incurred in promoting temporary relief to a pauper whose settlement is in a town situated in another county, either in the county where the relief is furnished, or in the county where the town of the pauper's settlement is situated. Muskingum County Infirmary v. Toledo, 15 Oh. St. 409. But see Perry Tp. v. Perry County Infirmary, 2 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 382, 2 WestLMonth 573 (holding that, where the directors of a poorhouse furnish temporary support in a township in another county, suit to recover therefor must be brought in the county where the township of settlement is situated).

[a] In Iowa, under Code Suppl. (1907) § 2270, the special limitations of six months do not run against the county from which a patient is committed to an insane hospital in favor of another county in which the patient is claimed to have a legal settlement until the auditor of such other county makes the required inand ignorance on the part of the municipality furnishing relief of the place of the pauper's settlement, and the consequent ignorance of what municipality is to be charged with his support, does not prevent the running of the time within which the action must be brought.[83] If no special statute exists,[84] the general statute of limitations[85] applies.[86] And the special statute may be waived by an express promise to pay the expenses incurred,[87] in which case the general statute will apply.[88]

Laches. Unreasonable delay by the town furnishing relief, in ascertaining the pauper's place of settlement and notifying the town liable, will bar recovery.[89] A physician who renders emergency services upon the credit of a person who, several years thereafter, became a pauper cannot then recover from the directors of the poor.[90]

[§ 273] 7. Parties. In some jurisdictions an action for supplies furnished by one town or poor district to a pauper of another must be brought in the name of the town or district furnishing the supplies,[91] while in others the action may be brought in the name of the poor officers of the furnishing district.[92] In an action by a physician against an overseer of the poor to recover for services rendered a pauper at defendant's request, plaintiff should not be compelled to make the town a party defendant.[93]

[§ 274] 8. Pleading[94]—a. In General. The declaration or complaint in an action against a town or county to recover expenses incurred for pauper relief should state all the facts necessary to make the liability complete under the statute.[95] It should be alleged that the pauper's place of settlement or residence was in defendant town or county;[96] but in an action to recover for supplies furnished to a wife, the declaration need not allege that her husvestigation and gives the required notice of his adverse finding. Buena Vista County v. Woodbury County, 163 Iowa 626, 145 NW 282.

[b] In Maine (1) under a statute providing that expenses for the relief of paupers incurred within three months before notice given to the town chargeable may be recovered by the town incurring the same in an action commenced within two years after the cause of action accrues, the cause of action is deemed to accrue, when no answer is returned by defendant town, at the expiration of two months from the time the notice was given. Veazie v. Howland, 53 Me. 39; Robbinston v. Lisbon, 40 Me. 287. (2) If an answer is returned denying liability, the cause of action is deemed to accrue at the time the answer is received by the relieving town. West Gardiner v. Hartland, 62 Me. 246; Veazie v. Howland, supra [overr Cutler v. Maker, 41 Me. 594 (holding that the statute runs from the delivery of the notice), and expl Augusta v. Vienna, 21 Me. 298 (decided on other grounds)]; Robbinston v. Lisbon, supra; Camden v. Lincolnville, 16 Me. 384. (3) If no action is brought within the two years, the right to recover is barred, not only as to such items as were incurred before the two years commenced to run, but also as to such as were incurred within the two years. Veazie v. Howland, supra. (4) An action to recover expenses incurred in supporting a pauper at a state asylum for the insane accrues at the date of payment thereof to the asylum. West Gardiner v. Hartland, 62 Me. 246; Bangor v. Fairfield, 46 Me. 358; Eastport v. East Machias, 40 Me. 280. (5) Under Rev. St. c 144 § 42, where a person unlawfully committed to an insane hospital has been lawfully recommitted, the recommitment revives the expenditures and cost of support under the unlawful commitment, and the same at once come within the application of the provisions pertaining to notice and limitation of actions in pauper cases, and a town committing has a right of action against the town liable for the support of such person for expenditures "incurred within three months before notice given to the town chargeable," whether such notice was given before the recommitment or after, provided the suit is "commenced within two years after the cause of action accrued." Rockport v. Searsmont, 103 Me. 495, 70 A 444.

[c] In Massachusetts (1) under a statute giving a right of action by one town against another to recover for pauper expenses incurred within three months next before notice to the town to be charged, and providing that such action shall be commenced within two years after the cause of action arises, the action must be brought within two years after notice is given and recovery cannot be had for expenses incurred more than three months before the giving of the notice. Weymouth v. Boston, 260 Mass. 388, 157 NE 591; Northampton v. Plainfield, 164 Mass. 506, 41 NE 785; Reading v. Malden, 141 Mass. 580, 7 NE 21; Cummington v. Wareham, 9 Cush. 585; Attleborough v. Mansfield, 15 Pick. 19; Townsend v. Billerica, 10 Mass. 411. See Amherst v. Shelburne, 11 Gray 107 (where recovery for support of a pauper in a state insane asylum was allowed where the action was brought within two years after payment by plaintiff to the asylum, although more than two years after notice to defendant). (2) This two years' limitation refers to the time of delivery of the notice and not to its date. Uxbridge v. Seekonk, 10 Pick. 150. (3) There being no remedy at common law, the statutory remedy must be strictly pursued. Needham v. Newton, 12 Mass. 452. (4) Expenses accruing within three months prior to the giving of notice, but incurred more than two years before the commencement of the suit, cannot be recovered. Harwich v. Hallowell, 14 Mass. 184; Readfield v. Dresden, 12 Mass. 317. (5) And this is true even though there has been a previous action in which plaintiff recovered judgment, and the expenses sued for in the present action accrued during the pendency of the former suit. Hallowell v. Harwich, 14 Mass. 186.

[d] In New York the action must be commenced within three months after answer, which must be returned within thirty days after notice. Stillwell v. Coons, 122 N. Y. 242, 25 NE 316 [aff 12 NYSt 745] (answer held sufficient to set the statute running).

[b] Acting in official capacity.—In a complaint for medical services to paupers, rendered at the request of the trustee of a township, the word "as" before the phrase "trustee of the township" is not necessary to show that the trustee acted in his official capacity. band's settlement was in defendant town, it being sufficient to allege hers to be there.[97] The service of notice upon defendant within the period required by statute is usually required to be alleged,[98] but the omission of such allegation can be taken advantage of only by demurrer.[99] Where notice is alleged, there is no need of an averment of demand before suit brought.[1] It has been held that the declaration or complaint should aver that the person to whom the relief was extended was indigent and in need of relief,[2] although the want of such allegation has been held not fatal after verdict.[3] In some jurisdictions it is necessary to allege that the pauper had no kindred legally bound to support him,[4] and a declaration which omits such allegation is bad on such demurrer,[5] although it is not ground for arrest of judgment.[6] Where the relief was furnished by an individual, he should allege that he was not liable for the pauper's support.[7] A declaration containing the common counts has been held sufficient,[8] and there need be no special count under the statute.[9] Where the statute authorizes a particular court to make and enforce an order compelling a poor district to pay for support furnished to a pauper, the fact that the prayer is for a mandamus instead of an order is immaterial.[10]

Plea, answer, or affidavit of defense.[11] The answer or affidavit of defense to a complaint for supplies furnished to a pauper must be certain and definite in its averments.[12] Legal conclusions should not be pleaded.[13] A plea in bar alleging the ability of the person relieved to maintain himself is not good on a special demurrer assigning for cause that it amounted to the general issue.[14]

Amendment.[15] An allegation of the particular day on which the person relieved fell into distress may be amended to show a different date.[16]

[§ 275] b. Issues, Proof, and Variance.[17] When the establishment of the whole allegation is essential to the right of recovery, such allegation should be proved in toto.[18] But facts not essential to the right of recovery need not be proved.[19] Evidence to

(2) A complaint, in an action by one county against another for taking care of an insane pauper of defendant county, which alleges that the pauper was a lawfully committed inmate of the almshouse of defendant county, and that he escaped into plaintiff county, sufficiently avers that the pauper was "last legally settled" in defendant county. Burke County v. Buncombe County, 101 N. C. 520, 8 SE 176.

"Assumpsit lies on a promise to discharge a legal obligation created by statute. But in the declaration all the facts must be averred, which are necessary to constitute this legal obligation. To charge the defendants in this action, it is not enough to allege, that the object of the relief was a pauper having his settlement in F. [the defendant town], and that the expenses were necessarily incurred in his relief; but also that the defendants had notice of the distressed situation of the pauper within three months from the time when the expenditures were made. For such notice is a fact necessary with others to constitute the legal obligation which will support a promise; the existence of the legal obligation being the consideration of the promise." Bath v. Freeport, supra.

[b] In Vermont the fact of giving notice required by the statute to the overseers of defendant, describing the condition of the prisoner, being a matter of evidence only, need not be averred in the complaint, in an action under Revised Laws of 1818, as amended by Acts (1886) No. 42 § 4, providing for the recovery of expenses incurred in the relief of a transient indigent prisoner. [b] In Indiana an averment in a complaint in an action for services rendered by a physician in attending the poor of the county, that those treated were "poor persons," is sufficient to show that they were public charges, and an averment that plaintiff was employed by the proper township trustee to treat them as poor persons shows a sufficient determination by the trustees that they were objects of charity. Warren County v. Osburn, 4 Ind. A. 590, 31 NE 541.

18. Barnstead v. Alton, 32 N. H. 245.

[a] Rule applied.—Where, in a suit for the support of a pauper, plaintiff relied on the settlement of a wife, and alleged that her husband had no settlement in the state at their intermarriage, and did not afterward acquire any, they were bound to prove the truth of this negative allegation, as well the want of any settlement at marriage as the subsequent nonacquisition of one. Barnstead v. Alton, 32 N. H. 245.

19. Vermilion County v. Knight, 2 Ill. 97.

[a] Proof that person relieved was a pauper.—In Illinois, in an action by a physician against a county

rebut proof that the person relieved had a settlement in defendant town has been held admissible without pleading it.[20] The allegations and the proof must correspond, and a material variance will be fatal to the action,[21] but an immaterial variance will be disregarded;[22] and this applies also to a variance between the notice given to defendant and the declaration.[23]

[§ 276] 9. Evidence[24]—a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In an action against a town or county for the recovery of expenses incurred for the support or relief of a pauper, the burden of proof, as in other civil actions,[25] is upon the party having the affirmative of the issue, as determined by the pleadings.[26] The burden is upon plaintiff to show the facts necessary to render defendant liable,[27] such as the fact that the settlement of the person relieved was in defendant town or county,[28] and that such person was a pauper at the time relief was furnished.[29] Defendant has the burden of establishing any affirmative defense,[30] such as a change of settlement from defendant town to plaintiff town.[31]

Presumption as to performance of official duty.[32] In such actions the legal presumption will, as a rule, be that the officers of the poor have done their duty.[33] But such presumption will not be indulged in, as to a vital jurisdictional fact, in favor of the officer or the principal whom he represents.[34]

Presumption of law or fact. Where supplies are shown to have been furnished on the order of one of the selectmen, a presumption that the other selectmen assented thereto is one of fact, and not of law.[35]

[§ 277] b. Admissibility. The rules governing admissibility of evidence in civil actions[36] are applicable in actions to recover for pauper supplies on the question of the pauper's place of settlement,[37] whether the person relieved was destitute and in need of relief,[38] and other issues on which defendfor medical attendance on a person who was a pauper, at the request of the county commissioners, it need not be proved, to support the action, that the person was in fact a pauper, this fact not being essential to the right of recovery. Vermilion County v. Knight, 2 Ill. 97.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) In an action by the state hospital for the insane against overseers of the poor of the borough, to recover the expenses of maintaining therein insane paupers received from defendants, plaintiff is not bound to prove that, as between defendants and the poor district, they had such paupers in charge by means of an order of relief or a subsequent order of approval, but such fact would be conclusively presumed. State Hospital v. Bellefonte Borough, 163 Pa. 175, 29 A 901. (2) The question of the propriety of charitable relief is confided to the discretion of the poor authorities, and, where they grant the relief asked, it is to be presumed they have made such investigations as they have deemed necessary and have determined the question as to the right of the party examined to such relief. Albany v. McNamara, 117 N. Y. 168, 22 NE 931, 6 LRA 212; Matter of Chamberlain, 73 Misc. 256, 132 NYS 681.

34. Albany v. McNamara, 117 N. Y. 168, 22 NE 931, 6 LRA 212.

[a] Rule applied.—In an action by a city for money paid in support of a pauper, a request by the poor person for such support will not be implied from the presumption that the officers of the poor performed their legal duty and investigated it and afforded aid, as the fact of such request lies at the foundation of the right of recovery, and is a substantial fact in controversy not the subject of a presumption. Albany v. McNamara, 117 N. Y. 168, 22 NE 931, 6 LRA 212.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Testimony as to the manner of the alleged pauper's showing his distress and need of relief, and as to his physical condition, was admissible in an action by one town against another for supplies furnished. New Portland v. Kingfield, 55 Me. 172. (2) In an action by one town against another to recover expenses incurred in the support of a pauper, plaintiff was entitled to prove by the pauper's son, who was his cotenant in the ownership of certain real estate encumbered by a mortgage, that it had been agreed that the father should pay the remaining note so secured if he kept the place, and that, if he could not pay it, the witness was to have the property. Ripton v. Brandon, 80 Vt. 234, 67 A 541.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) As bearing on the destitute condition of one who with his family was furnished relief by plaintiff town, for which it seeks recovery from defendant town, evidence of the earnings, not traced to the family, of the pauper's brother, who lived with the family and paid his board, is inadmissible. Hartland v. St. Albans, 123 Me. 82, 121 A 552. (2) Where a request to remove the pauper had not been objected to within two months, evidence by defendant of the pauper's ability to support himself was inadmissible in an action to recover for his expense of support and burial. Topsham v. Harpswell, 1 Mass. 518; Freeport v. Edgecombe, 1 Mass. 459. (3) Evidence as to the financial condition of a stepson of the pauper is irrelevant, the pauper not having been maintained by the stepson. Barnet v. Norton, 90 Vt. 544, ant's liability depends.[39] Evidence of the customary method of the county commissioners in caring for the poor in emergency cases is admissible where no records are kept.[40]

Parol evidence.[41] Where the town procuring an order of removal of a sick pauper is liable for his support until he can be removed,[42] parol evidence is admissible to prove that the pauper was sick at the time the order of removal was made, and continued in that condition, so that he could not safely be removed until the time of actual removal.[43] Parol evidence is also admissible to show that certain named persons were overseers of the poor when the relief was furnished.[44]

The declarations of the pauper, explaining any acts on his part tending to establish the issue, are admissible as part of the res gestæ if made at the time such acts were performed.[45]

Special laws. Where a general law recognizes and amends special laws relating to counties having the town system of caring for the poor, such special laws are admissible to show that a certain county was operating under the town system.[46]

[§ 278] c. Weight and Sufficiency. General rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence[47] apply in actions in which it is sought to recover for supplies or other relief furnished to a pauper;[48] and, as in other civil actions,[49] a fact is sufficiently proved by a preponderance of the evidence.[50]

[§ 279] 10. Trial and Review—a. Questions of Law and Fact. As in other civil actions,[51] questions of law in actions against towns or counties to recover for relief furnished to paupers are for the court,[52] while questions of fact are for the jury.[53] It is for the court to determine the reasonableness of rules adopted by the county board with respect to medical aid furnished to poor persons,[54] the construction of a removal notice by overseers of a town furnishing pauper supplies,[55] what constitutes the legal liability of a town to support a pauper,[56] and who is the proper officer to bind the town for support furnished by a third person,[57] and it is error to submit such questions to the jury.[58] Where there is evidence from which the jury might be justified in finding the existence of a fact in issue, the issue should be submitted to them for determination.[59] Questions which have been held for the jury under the evidence in actions of this kind are:

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) It is not error to admit in evidence a conversation between one of the claimants for medical services and the members of the county board, while in session on the presentation of such claim, where its tendency was to show that the county at the time recognized its liability to claimants for their services to paupers. Orange County v. Ritter, 90 Ind. 362. (2) Where, in an action for pauper supplies furnished a pauper and his family, an amendment is filed to the writ, adding a new count for the same supplies furnished the pauper alone, it is not error to admit evidence of the whole amount of supplies furnished the family. Lisbon v. Winthrop, 93 Me. 541, 45 A 528.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—South Burlington v. Worcester, 67 Vt. 411, 31 A 891; Tufts v. Chester, 62 Vt. 353, 19 A 988.

Barnet v. Norton, 90 Vt. 544, 99 A 238. (2) Where one town maintains a pauper, a resident of another town, notices of expenses for relief having been given at intervals, introduction of one does not prevent introduction of subsequent notices. Barnet v. Norton, supra. (3) Communications between the overseers of the poor of the respective towns, not constituting notices, are irrelevant. Barnet v. Norton, supra.

[d] Ratification of notice.—The acts of a town, after service on another town of a notice of supplies furnished to a pauper, which purports to be signed by its officers, may be shown on the issue whether it ratified the notice. Hempstead v. Plaistow, 49 N. H. 84.

[e] Relevancy of evidence to repel proof of mailing.—Evidence by the selectmen of the town to be notified that no letter containing the notice was received by them was relevant, as was also evidence that no such letter was sent from the post office of the notifying town nor received at the post office of the town to be notified in the month when mailing was alleged. (2) Whether there was an agreement to pay for medical services, there being evidence that the chairman of the supervisors knew that the physician was attending a pauper family. Beach v. Neenah, 90 Wis. 623, 64 NW 319. (3) Whether a communication from plaintiff to the overseers was intended by her as notice that she would thereafter render services to a pauper only on the credit of the town. (4) Evidence that a pauper left the poorhouse and entered the residence of an inhabitant of the same township, there becoming sick and in such condition that he could not be conveniently moved, and that notice was given to the overseer of the poor, who neglected to provide for the pauper, was sufficient to support an action for the expense of maintaining the pauper. Shreve v. Budd, 7 N. J. L. 431.

[b] Evidence held insufficient: (1) To warrant a recovery by plaintiff. Salsbury v. Philadelphia, 44 Pa. 303 (where no express contract to board minor pauper grandchildren was proved, nor any evidence thereof, except a book in which plaintiff had made charges against the city and credited the amounts received from the guardians of the poor, it was held that the instruction of the court on the trial that there was no evidence upon which he could recover was proper); Vershire v. Hyde Park, 64 Vt. 638, 25 A 431; Sweetwater County v. Carbon County, 6 Wyo. 254, 44 P 66. (2) To sustain a recovery for medical services rendered after the expiration of the term of office of the supervisors with whom plaintiff contracted. Jones v. Lind, 79 Wis. 64, 48 NW 247. (3) To sustain a verdict for defendant. Bangor v. Hampden, 41 Me. 484 (where, in a suit to recover for supplies furnished to persons alleged to be paupers, it was shown that the persons relieved were in need of immediate relief, and that the supplies were necessary, although rendered necessary by the misconduct of the husband and father, a verdict for defendants will be set aside and a new trial granted).

Whether the person relieved was in fact a pauper and in need of relief;[60] whether pauper supplies furnished on application were actually received by applicant;[61] whether the overseers of the poor acted in good faith in furnishing relief;[62] and whether the relief furnished was proper and reasonable.[63] The question whether supplies were furnished and received as pauper supplies is a question of fact,[64] or one of mixed law and fact.[65]

Notice to defendant. The sufficiency of the notice required to be given to defendant town or district by the town or district furnishing relief[66] is a mixed question of law and fact.[67] That is, it is for the court to determine as a matter of law whether the notice contains all the elements of information required by the statute,[68] while it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether such elements are so clearly and expressly stated as to enable defendant's officers to understand them;[69] and where the notice is not clear, the jury may decide what its meaning is.[70] It is also a question for the jury to determine whether the notice was given within a reasonable time.[71]

[§ 280] b. Instructions. General rules with respect to instructions in civil actions[72] apply in actions to recover from towns or poor districts for relief furnished to paupers.[73] Instructions should correctly state the elements necessary to entitle plaintiff to recover,[74] and should not be misleading.[75]

Requests for instructions. In accordance with the general rule,[76] where a timely request is made for instructions which correctly state the law upon a material matter, and which are warranted by the pleading and evidence, they should be given.[77] Thus it is the duty of the court on request to instruct the jury what would or would not constitute the furnishing and receiving of pauper supplies so as to prevent the acquisition of a settlement.[78]

[§ 281] c. Verdict or Findings, and Judgment. The rules applicable to the verdict and findings in court actions generally[79] govern in an action to recover for relief furnished to a pauper.[80] Findings of fact by the court, if not irreconcilable, should be construed together.[81] As in other civil actions,[82] the judgment must conform to the pleadings.[83]

[§ 282] d. Review.[84] Principles governing the review of civil cases generally[85] apply in actions to recover for pauper supplies,[86] including the rule, subject to some exceptions,[87] that questions not presented in the trial court will not be considered on appeal,[88] that findings of fact by the jury on conflicting evidence will not be reviewed,[89] and that error not prejudicial to the party complaining is not ground for reversal.[90]

[b] Settlement of pauper.—(1) A nonsuit was improper where defendant was liable if the pauper named in the notice had a legal settlement therein, and there was evidence on that issue sufficient to have sustained a verdict if if had been rendered in favor of plaintiff. him by plaintiff town are restricted to those incurred during a certain period before and after the time of giving notice to defendant.[92] The expenses for which recovery is sought must be reasonable in amount.[93] And if the notice required to be given to the town chargeable[94] is of a larger sum than that declared for, no more than the sum declared for can be recovered.[95] In an action by the directors of a county infirmary for the maintenance of an insane pauper against the county in which the township of the pauper's settlement is situated, brought after returning the pauper to such county with a request that she be cared for by it, the amount recoverable is the expense of removal to the county of settlement and of the pauper's subsequent maintenance in the infirmary, and does not include compensation from the time of admission to the infirmary.[96]

Recovery by individuals furnishing support. Where no amount has been fixed or agreed upon as compensation for services or supplies furnished by an individual to a pauper, such person is entitled to recover a reasonable compensation therefor from the town or county chargeable.[97] And where certain relatives of the pauper are chargeable with his support in proportion to their ability,[98] a relative so chargeable, if able to contribute partial support, may recover from the town only that part of the support which he cannot supply.[99]

[a] In Maine and Massachusetts (1) in an action by a town against the town of a pauper's settlement to recover for support furnished to the pauper, plaintiff is entitled to recover, not only the expenses paid or legally incurred within three months before notice was given to defendant town, but also those incurred after such notice was given, down to the commencement of the action, provided such action is not barred by the statute of limitations. Veazie v. Howland, 53 Me. 39; Weymouth v. Boston, 260 Mass. 388, 157 NE 591; Attleborough v. Mansfield, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 19; Townsend v. Billerica, 10 Mass. 411. [a] Services of overseers of poor.—On removal of a pauper cared for by one poor district to another district, in which he has his legal settlement, the latter district cannot be charged with the services of the officers of the former district in caring for the pauper, and in looking up his legal settlement, and ordering his removal, which are a part of their official duties, nor with counsel fees. Montrose v. Blakeley, 3 LackLegN (Pa.) 154.

[b] Amount stated in notice to town ultimately liable.—(1) If a town expends an extravagant sum in the support of a pauper, and the notice given to the town ultimately liable truly states the sum expended, the former town can recover a reasonable proportion of the sum expended. Southbridge v. Charlton, 15 Mass. 248; Barnstead v. Strafford, 8 N. H. 142. (2) But if the selectmen give notice of the sum expended, knowing that some of the items are much larger than the town has paid, or assumed to pay, nothing can be recovered on such items. Barnstead v. Strafford, supra.

[e] In England (1) on an application to justices for an order under Lunacy Act (1890) § 287 for the payment by the guardians of a poor law union of the reasonable charges of the expenses of maintenance of a pauper lunatic in an asylum, the justices have power to fix the amount of the payment to be made by the guardians, and in fixing that amount the justices are not restricted to the limit of 14s a week imposed by § 283. Glamorgan County Asylum v. Cardiff, [1911] 1 K. B. 437 [dism app [1910] 2 K. B. 547]. (2) The functions of the justices under § 287 are judicial and not merely ministerial. Glamorgan County Asylum v. face grading,[15] although substantial grading may not be included;[16] the laying[17] or flagging[18] of a sidewalk; and repaving.[19] It is sometimes synonymous with "build."[20] It has been distinguished from "macadamize,"[21] although it has been said to be more comprehensive than, and to include, "macadamize."[22] "Paving" is said to be more comprehensive than, and to include, "flagging"[23] and "graveling."[24]

Phrases: "Cost of paving,"[25] "general paving fund,"[26] "paved, macadamized or other hard-surfaced road,"[27] "paving fund,"[28] and "system of street paving."[29]

PAVED ROAD OR STREET.[30] A road covered with any character of material so as to make a firm, hard, smooth surface, over which horses, carriages, automobiles, and other vehicles may pass, is classed as a "paved road."[31] The term "paved road" or "paved street" has been held to include a graveled street,[32] a planked street,[33] a road covered with sand and clay,[34] and a shell road.[35] It has been held not to include a macadam road,[36] or a street macadamized with broken stone in a strip in the middle, the remainder being dirt road,[37] although, as popularly understood, a macadamized street is a paved street, but every paved street is not necessarily a macadamized street.[38]

PAVEMENT.[39] In a broad sense, any firm, hard covering for areas subjected to the wear and tear of human feet, or of hoofs and wheels, designed to keep the feet or wheels from the ground or earth, and to present a more or less dry, durable, and

[a] Paving the gutters with cobblestone and the cartway with broken stone (macadamizing), is a paving within the meaning of the act of the legislature conferring upon a city the power of paving its streets, and collecting the cost from the owners of the adjoining property by filing claims for paving, as liens. Huidekoper v. Meadville, 83 Pa. 156, 158 [quot Greensburg v. Laird, 8 Pa. Co. 608, 618].

[b] Underground drainage or sewerage included.—"It may be, on account of the physical conditions, that it is not practicable to successfully drain a street by carrying off the water in gutters on the surface. It may be that the street is so located that this could be more successfully done by a system of underground drainage or storm sewers. Under such circumstances, a storm sewer would not be a different or separate improvement, like the construction of an ordinary sewer, but would be a part of the work necessarily incident to paving the street," etc. Fort Smith Pav. Dist. No. 7 v. Brun, 105 Ark. 65, 71, 150 SW 154.

[c] Underground drainage or sewerage not included.—(1) The word may also include certain kinds of drainage, but underground drainage or sewerage does not come within its meaning. Mobile v. Construction by city see Municipal Corporations §§ 2281–2289.

Liability for defects and obstructions smooth surface;[40] a hard, solid surface covering for a floor, road, or factory, commonly of stone, brick, concrete, asphalt, or wood.[41] In a narrower sense, a hard covering of the surface of a road or footway commonly composed of macadam, granite blocks, brick, sheet, or block, asphalt, or wood for vehicular traffic, and flagstones, cement, or tar, concrete, and brick for sidewalks.[42] In a modern and more restricted sense, the term is sometimes confined to streets and roads,[43] excluding the sidewalks,[44] although sometimes the term is employed as including sidewalks.[45] Curbs and gutters may[46] or may not[47] be included in the term. "Pavement" is a more comprehensive word than, but includes, "flagging."[48] The first thing necessary in a pavement, of course, is a good foundation,[49] but the primary and controlling requisite is that a firm, hard, smooth surface be secured.[50] No particular material is necessary to constitute the pavement;[51] it may be made of anything which will produce a hard, firm, smooth surface for travel.[52]

Bitulithic pavement. A patented pavement having a foundation layer of stone such as is used in ordinary macadam or telford roads, upon which rests one or more layers of smaller stones coated with coal tar, coal tar pitch, asphalt, or a mixture of them, or other equivalent bituminous material.[53]

Other phrases: "Brick pavement,"[54] "kind of pavement or material,"[55] "Nicholson pavement,"[56] and "sheet asphalt pavement."[57]

PAVING TILE.[58] A piece of burned earth or clay or a piece of marble, suitable for, and intended to be used as, a covering for a floor, a pavement, or the like;[59] a tile for paving.[60]

I. DEFINITIONS AND DISTINCTIONS

[§ 1] A. Pawnbroker. While in general terms a pawnbroker may be said to be one who lends money, usually in small sums, upon property delivered in pledge,[1] more accurately speaking he is a person who makes a business or occupation of lending money at interest on the security of personal property deposited in his keeping.[2]

"Pawnbrokerage" is commonly denominated as the business of loaning money on personal property delivered as security for loans.[3]

[§ 2] B. Pawn.[4] The word "pawn," usually employed synonymously with the term "pledge,"[5] is used both as a noun to designate a certain species of bailment or pledge,[6] or, in a more limited sense, to designate the thing actually deposited by the pawner with the pawnee;[7] and as a verb, as meaning to put in pawn or to pledge, by the delivery of personal property to another as security for the return on a day certain of money lent.[8]

[§ 3] C. Pawner and Pawnee. The parties to a pawn transaction[9] are referred to as the "pawner" and the "pawnee."[10]

The pawner is the person depositing a pawn[11] as security for the payment of his debt or the fulfillment of his liability.[12]

The pawnee is the person who lends the money and receives the security;[13] the person who takes anything in pawn;[14] a pawnbroker.[15]

[§ 4] D. Pawn Ticket. The pawn ticket is the pawnbroker's receipt for a pawn.[16]

II. REGULATION AND CONTROL

[§ 5] A. By the State—1. In General. The state, within the general scope of its police power,[17] may control and regulate the business or occupation of pawnbroking.[18] A single act of receiving or taking a pawn is not exercising the trade or carrying on the business of a pawnbroker under a statute regulating the trade or business of pawnbroking.[19] Under a statute defining a "pawnbroker" as any person loaning money on personal property and charging as much as the maximum rate of interest permitted by the statute, the statutory definition and regulation of the occupation is confined to pawnbrokers charging a maximum rate of interest.[20]

[§ 6] 2. Requiring License.[21] The state[22] has power to require a license as a condition precedent to the lawful pursuit of the business of pawnbroking.[23] The license requirement may be limited to pawnbrokers doing business in cities or towns of a certain number or more of inhabitants.[24] One who has paid a license tax for the privilege of conducting the business of pawnbroking is not liable to an additional license tax as a dealer in secondhand clothing[25] or as a dealer in pistols[26] because he sells such unredeemed pawned articles,[27] or resells after he has purchased the pawn upon the pawner's default;[28] but a licensed pawnbroker, who habitually resells unredeemed pawned pistols and retains the profit, if any, resulting from the sale over and above the defaulting pawner's debt, is subject to a police regulation imposing a license tax for the retail sale of pistols.[29] A solitary instance of the sale of an unredeemed pawned pistol by a licensed pawnbroker does not render him liable to the license tax for the sale of pistols.[30]

[§ 7] 3. Amount of Loans. Where a statute limits the amount to be loaned by a pawnbroker to any one person,[31] the limitation cannot be circumvented by the pawner's use of the names of a number of fictitious persons in order to obtain loans, no one of which exceeds the statutory limit, but all of which total more than the permitted amount.[32]

[§ 8] 4. Rate of Interest. The state under its police power may regulate the rate of interest to be charged by pawnbrokers;[33] and the character of the business is such that it is not improper to allow a charge of interest beyond the ordinary statutory interest limit.[34] While the maximum rate is usually fixed by statute,[35] it has been held that, in the absence of a direct prohibition, by the statute governing pawnbrokers, of a rate of interest above the maximum therein mentioned, a pawnbroker may, under the express authorization of a general usury law not excepting pawnbrokers from its operation, charge any rate of interest which may be agreed upon between him and the pawner.[36] The maximum statutory rate cannot be enlarged, by treating a loan for a longer period as a monthly contract[37] or by adding storage charges for the keeping of the

28. Shelton v. Silverfield, supra.
[a] Reason for rule.—"The very nature of the pawnbroker's business carries with it the necessity for a sale of unredeemed pledges, and it could not be expected that the pawnbroker would sacrifice his security by permitting the same to be sold for a song. The law would warrant him in buying in the security, and in order to save himself from loss, sell it again; in fact this procedure is an essential part or feature of the business. To say that a pawnbroker shall pay a very large amount, perhaps $250 to $300 per annum to State and county, as a privilege tax to carry on his business, and that he cannot protect himself in the sale of unredeemed articles, would be absolutely ruinous to the business he had been licensed to do, and a denial to him of property protection." [a] Reason for rule.—"When the Pawnbrokers' Act was proposed, the Usury Laws were in force, and that Act must therefore be regarded as an enabling Act, in the interest of the poorer classes of the community, who might be greatly benefited by the power to pledge small articles for small loans, the trouble attending the making of which would not be compensated by the legal rate of interest then permitted, and the greater rate provided by the Act furnished an inducement for the use of capital in that way." pawn.[38] The statutory rate controls where the provisions of an ordinance on the subject are in conflict therewith.[39] Actual receipt of interest in excess of the statutory maximum is essential to constitute a violation of the statute.[40]

[§ 9] 5. Dealing with Minors. A statute forbidding the acceptance of goods in pledge from a minor[41] does not preclude a contract with an adult and delivery of the goods to the pawnbroker by the minor as messenger for the adult.[42]

[§ 10] 6. Pawn Tickets.[43] A statute providing that certain information shall be inserted in the pawn ticket issued to the pawner has been held to be mandatory.[44]

[§ 11] B. By Municipality—1. In General. Under express or implied power municipal corporations may regulate the business or occupation of pawnbroking[45] within the municipal limits.[46]

[§ 12] 2. Power To Regulate Licensed Pawnbroker. The pawnbroker's license is taken with the knowledge that the licensee is subject to reasonable regulations made by the municipality.[47]

[§ 13] 3. Absolute Prohibition of Business. As may be seen from the rule elsewhere discussed,[48] the statutory power granted to a municipality to regulate and license pawnbrokers may[49] or may not[50] include a discretionary power to prohibit the business absolutely.

[§ 14] 4. Requiring License[51]—a. In General. In accordance with general rules,[52] a municipal corporation, when authorized by charter or statute, may require that one desiring to pursue the business or occupation of pawnbroking shall obtain a license therefor.[53] An ordinance provision limiting eligibility for a pawnbroker's license to citizens has been held constitutional,[54] and not violative of a treaty guaranty to "carry on trade," as to Japanese nationals.[55] Since the business of a broker[56] and that of a pawnbroker[57] constitute separate and distinct classes,[58] it would be competent for a municipality to lay an entirely different license tax upon brokers and pawnbrokers.[59] A pawnbroker who has secured a license for such occupation is not doubly taxed by being required to take out the required license for the retail sale of pistols.[60] Where the ordinance leaves the suitability of applicant for a pawnbroker's license within the discretion of the mayor, he is justified in refusing a license to one whose license had previously been revoked.[61]

Amount of license fee. In the absence of clear abuse, the courts will not interfere with municipal discretion in fixing the amount of the pawnbroker's license fee.[62]

[§ 15] b. Who Are Pawnbrokers Subject to License.[63] A person to be subject to an ordinance requiring a license must fall within the definition given in the statute.[64] However, statutory definition of a "pawnbroker" has been held not to be exclusive so as to preclude additional specifications under a nonconflicting ordinance including persons

58. Schaul v. Charlotte, 118 N. C. 733, 734, 24 SE 526.

"'Pawnbrokers' is an entirely separate and distinct business and does not come under the generic title 'broker.' The word 'broker,' derived from an Anglo-Saxon word signifying 'to use,' primarily means an agent. It means in law a middle-man, or negotiator, between other persons, for a compensation called brokerage, who takes no possession of the subject matter of negotiation, and usually contracts in the name of those employing him, and not in his own name; and sometimes it means, in ordinary speech, a dealer in money, notes, bills of exchange, &c. A pawnbroker has none of the characteristics of either kind of brokers. Indeed, he is not an agent at all. He contracts in his own name, has no employer, charges no brokerage, and always takes possession of the property; neither does he deal in money, notes and bills of exchange, like the second class of brokers above named. . . . The verbal coincidence of the last two syllables of the longer word being 'broker' is purely fortuitous, for a pawnbroker is not a broker at all." Schaul v. Charlotte, supra.

[a] In Illinois (1) under a statute providing "that every person or company engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge, or as security for money or other thing ad-

not pawnbrokers within the statutory definition.[65] One is no less a pawnbroker, subject to license, because at the same time and place he conducts other branches of business, not of this character,[66] or because he makes loans on pledges of no other kinds of goods than jewelry and diamonds,[67] or because he requires pawners to execute notes or chattel mortgages in connection with the transaction.[68] One may be a pawnbroker engaged in such occupation, without completion of actual contracts of pawnbroking.[69] Single or occasional loans upon the security of personal property deposited by the borrower are not sufficient to constitute the lender a pawnbroker.[70]

[§ 16] c. Duration of License. The year for which a pawnbroker's license runs begins when the application for the license is made and the fee paid, and runs until the corresponding day of the following year.[71]

[§ 17] d. Revocation.[72] A city council may provide as a condition precedent to the issuance of a pawnbroker's license that applicant shall agree that his license may be revoked at any time.[73] The revocation of the license is lawful, where it appears that the pawnbroker has been convicted of a violation of an ordinance regulating the business of pawnbrokers,[74] and this notwithstanding an appeal was taken and pending from the conviction.[75]

[§ 18] C. In the District of Columbia.[76] Congress has power to regulate pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia.[77] Thus congress may require a license for pawnbroking within the District of Columbia,[78] may limit eligibility for the license to residents of the District[79] and to corporations which appoint a resident agent within the District upon whom process may be served,[80] and may prescribe legal rates of interest to be charged by pawnbrokers.[81] A pawnbroker is subject to license within the District when essential elements of his business are conducted there.[82]

[§ 19] D. Effect of Violation of Regulations on Validity of Contract.[83] The contract between the pawner and pawnee may be rendered invalid by failure upon the part of the pawnbroker to comply with the statutory or ordinance requirements,[84] as for example, where the pawnbroker has failed to procure a license,[85] or has loaned a sum in excess of a statutory maximum.[86]

Charging interest above rate permitted by statute[87] has been held to render the contract void.[88] However, such a charge of unlawful interest has been held not to render the contract invalid as to the principal sum of the loan,[89] and to invalidate it only to the extent of the excessive interest vanced to the pawner or pledger, shall be held and is hereby defined to be a pawn-broker. . . . Two important elements are required to constitute a pawn-broker: First, the person must be engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge for money advanced. . . . Second, the person must be engaged in receiving property in pledge, or as security for money or other thing advanced to the pawner or pledger." Chicago v. Hulbert, 118 Ill. 632, 636, 8 NE 812, 59 AmR 400. (2) Thus a person cannot be regarded a pawnbroker subject to the ordinance so long as he receives no personal property in pawn for a loan. Chicago v. charged.[90] The transaction is not rendered invalid by the pawnee's exaction of unlawful interest for an extension of time for the payment of the loan;[91] nor is it invalidated by an exaction of unlawful interest by an employee or clerk of the pawnee without the latter's knowledge.[92]

Requirements as to pawn tickets. Failure to comply with the statutory requirements as to pawn tickets[93] may render the contract invalid.[94] However, the pawnee's rights arising out of the contract of pawn are not invalidated by the insertion of false information in the pawn ticket, where such information was derived from the pawner and was inserted in good faith.[95]

Failure to keep daily record of goods pawned, as required by statute or ordinance,[96] has been held to invalidate the contract of pawn.[97] However, an agreement not to make such a required record of pawn transactions and not to make a required report of such record to designated police officials has been held not to invalidate the contract.[98]

Failure to deliver to pawner written copy of the pawnbroker's entry of the transaction on a register, as required by statute,[99] has been held to render the contract void;[1] but there is authority to the contrary.[2]

III. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO PAWN

[§ 20] Property subject to pawn is confined to "goods and chattels."[3] Under a statute regulating pawnbrokers, the term "property"[4] has been held to include only such articles of personal property as might actually be delivered over to the possession and control of the lender,[5] and not stocks, bonds, notes, or mortgages, or choses in action, or evidences of debt.[6] Under some statutory regulations,[7] certain chattels, such as pistols, dirks, bowie knives, razors, sling shots, or weapons of like kind, may not be received in pawn by a pawnbroker.[8]

IV. POSSESSION AND USE OF PAWN

[§ 21] A. In General. The pawnee has a special property[9] in the chattel deposited with him to secure the debt of the pawner. This special property amounts to a right to retain the pawn until the debt is paid,[10] and to a use of the pawn under certain circumstances.[11]

[§ 22] B. Retention of Pawn[12]—1. In General. The nature of the transaction between the pawner and the pawnee gives the latter a right to retain the thing pawned as security for the repayment of the loan made to the pawner;[13] but the pawnee cannot rightfully retain the pawn as against the pawner who tenders him the amount due even after the expiration of the statutory period for redemption,[14] where he has not at the time of the tender actually exercised his right to sell the pawn upon the pawner's default.[15]

[§ 23] 2. As against True Owner[16]—a. In General. As against the true owner, the pawnee acquires no right to retain possession, as security for the loan, of an article pawned without the former's knowledge, consent, or authority.[17] The rule ap-

[a] Reason for rule.—"By this statute, it is made the duty of every pawnbroker and second-hand dealer to maintain in his place of business a book or other permanent record in which shall be recorded each loan, purchase, or sale, and the name and address of the persons with whom the transaction is had, together with other data. For failure to obey the mandate of the statute, a penalty is imposed. By the terms of the act, however, it does not appear that the contract should be void if the pawnbroker fail to perform the statutory duty. . . . The rule is, that where a contract violates a statutory regulation of business, it does not thereby become void unless made so by the terms of the act." Lane v. Henry, 80 Wash. 172, 173, 141 P 365.

[a] Reason for rule.—"Possession is one of the indicia of property, but no dealer can act upon it as conclusive. If he . . . contracts with plies where the goods have been stolen[18] or embezzled[19] by the pawner, or have been loaned to the pawner,[20] or where the pawner is in possession for a specific purpose,[21] such as to sell the article on commission,[22] or to sell it to a particular person,[23] or for a particular amount,[24] or to permit another to make an inspection of it.[25] Where an executor wrongfully pawns silver plate in his possession as trustee for distribution under the terms of a will, and the pawnee has no notice that he deals with him as an executor in the execution of his duty, the pawnee cannot retain possession of the plate against the coexecutor and a new trustee appointed on the death of the pawner.[26] After the death of a tenant for life a pawnee is not, as against the remainderman, entitled to retain possession of property pawned by the tenant for life.[27] However, a pawnee may retain the pawn against the true owner as security for the loan where an article is pawned by one to whom the true owner has intrusted it with a general power to sell,[28] where the owner allows another to assume possession of the property "for the purposes of making any transfer of it,"[29] or where the pawnee is protected against the true owner by some statutory provision.[30] Where title has passed to the pawner who obtained goods from the owner by means of misrepresentations, the pawnee may retain the goods to secure the debt.[31] The owner's delivery of jewelry to the pawner for appraisal to secure a proposed loan from the pawner is sufficient to protect the pawnee who lends money to the pawner upon the security of the jewelry as against the owner who completed his transaction with the pawner thereafter.[32]

[§ 24] b. Repayment of Loan. The true owner is entitled to possession of the chattel pawned by an unauthorized bailee[33] without repaying the pawnee the amount advanced by him to the pawner.[34] However, where the pawner has a general power of sale,[35] or the pawnee is otherwise protected against the true owner,[36] the latter must reimburse the pawnee before he can be compelled to surrender or return the property pawned.[37]

[§ 25] 3. As against Landlord Distraining for Rent. A pawnee with whom goods have been deposited in the way of his trade is entitled to retain possession as against his landlord attempting to distrain them for rent.[38]

[§ 26] C. Use of Pawn. Where the article pawned may be the worse for use, the pawnee cannot use it while in pawn,[39] but the rule is otherwise if the nature of the article is such that it will not be injured by use.[40]

V. CARE OF PAWN

[§ 27] A. In General. Since the transaction between the pawner and the pawnee is a mutual benefit bailment,[41] the common law imposes upon the pawnee the duty of ordinary care and diligence as to the care of the property deposited in pawn,[42] that is, the care which a prudent person would exercise as to his own property;[43] but the pawnee is not answerable for the loss of the pawn unless his failure to exercise such care and diligence is shown;[44] and the same rule applies under a statute[45] imposing liability upon the pawnee for loss of, or injury to, the goods pawned by or through his default, neglect, or willful misbehavior.[46]

[§ 28] B. Modification of Liability by Contract.

Under the general rule,[47] a pawner and a pawnee may increase or diminish the rights arising from their transaction by stipulations contained in the contract of bailment,[48] which may be embodied in the pawn ticket.[49] Thus the terms printed upon the pawn ticket may impose a personal trust upon the pawnee[50] safely to keep and protect the property pawned at his own shop[51] and under the safeguard of a specified protective company.[52] Such a contract creates a legal obligation on the part of the pawnee from which he cannot relieve himself by a transfer of the pawn without the pawner's consent,[53] and the pawnee is liable for a loss by robbery in the pawnshop of one to whom he sells his interest in all goods pawned with him, without notifying the owner, where the goods are transferred to the buyer's pawnshop and the latter is not shown to be protected as specified on the pawn ticket.[54] On the other hand the parties may make binding stipulations that the pawnee shall not be liable for losses due to fire,[55] breakage,[56] burglary,[57] or robbery,[58] or that the pawnee's liability for loss should not exceed a certain amount.[59] However, stipulations against liability for loss from certain causes do not preclude the pawnee's liability for such losses induced by his own negligence.[60]

[§ 29] C. After Timely Tender of Money Lent. The pawnee is liable for any loss or damage which occurs to the pawn after the amount of the debt has been tendered to him and he should have returned the pawn.[61]

[§ 30] D. While Using Pawn. If the thing pawned is being used by the pawnee and while so being used by him is lost and damaged, he is liable to the pawner therefor.[62]

VI. TRANSFER OF INTEREST IN PAWN

[§ 31] A. By Pawner—1. In General. Subject to the claim of the pawnee, the pawner has the same right over the article pawned as he had before the pawn was made,[63] and may sell and transfer his interest therein.[64]

[§ 32] 2. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers. The sale of the pawn by the pawner transfers to the purchaser the same interest therein which the pawner had.[65] The pawner's assignee may recover the value of the property from the pawnee where the latter, after being notified of the assignment, delivers the pawn to the original pawner.[66]

[§ 33] B. By Pawnee—1. In General. The pawnee may assign his interest in the pawn,[67] or he may transfer conditionally his interest by way of pawn to another,[68] independently of any agreement or assent on the part of the pawner.[69] However, where a special agreement imposes a personal trust upon the pawnee for the care and custody of the pawn,[70] he cannot sell the pawn and transfer the possession and custody thereof without the consent of the pawner.[71] Where a statute forbids sale or disposition of the pawn until a specified time after the pawner's default in payment without his written consent,[72] the pawnee cannot transfer his interest in the pawn before the expiration of the statutory period without the pawner's written consent thereto.[73]

[§ 34] 2. Effect on Rights of Pawner. Where the contract of pawn imposes a personal obligation upon the pawnee for the care and custody of the pawn,[74] the sale of the pawn and a transfer thereof to the shop of the transferee without the pawner's consent leaves the pawnee liable to the pawner for its subsequent loss by theft.[75] The same rule applies where sale or disposition of the pawn until a specified time after the pawner's default without his written consent is forbidden by statute,[76] and the pawnee transfers his interest in the pawn within the statutory period without the pawner's written consent thereto.[77]

[§ 35] 3. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers.[78] The pawnee's assignee may lawfully acquire the possession of the pawn[79] which he takes under all the responsibilities of the original pawnee.[80] Upon a conditional transfer of the pawnee's interest by way of pawn to another,[81] the assignee holds the pawn until the debt of the pawner is discharged.[82] The pawnee's transferee is liable to the true owner of an article pawned by one to whom the owner delivered it for a specific purpose.[83]

VII. REDEMPTION

[§ 36] A. Who May Redeem. The pawn may be redeemed by the pawner,[84] or by an assignee or purchaser of the pawn ticket upon presentation thereof,[85] where the contract of pawn[86] or a statute governing pawnbrokers[87] provides for the delivery of the pawn to the holder of the pawn ticket.[88]

[§ 37] B. Period for. The period for redemption may be fixed by statute,[89] express agreement,[90] or by a general custom known to the pawner at the time of the pawning.[91] However, the expiration of the statutory period for redemption does not bar the pawner's right to redeem until the pawnee has actually exercised his right of sale.[92]

After loss of pawn ticket. A pawner who has lost his pawn ticket, and has complied with the statutory requirements for the issuance of a duplicate, may redeem at any time when he would have been entitled to do so under the original contract.[93]

Pawner's death before expiration of statutory period does not toll the statute so as to permit his administratrix to redeem from the pawnee who has sold the pawn after the expiration of the statutory period, but before her appointment and offer to redeem.[94]

[§ 38] C. Tender of Money Lent—1. Amount. The pawner cannot redeem the pawn without paying the whole amount of the debt in principal and interest.[95] Where the pawner has agreed to pay interest in excess of the legal rate,[96] he is entitled to the possession of the pawn upon a tender of the principal and lawful interest.[97] Where the pawner has agreed to pay a given sum as a bonus for the use of the money loaned, a tender of the principal sum with the amount of the bonus, without interest, is a sufficient tender to redeem.[98]

[§ 39] 2. When Not Necessary. The pawner is entitled to redeem without a tender of the amount of the debt where the pawnee refuses a demand for the pawn upon the ground that another claims some interest therein.[99]

[§ 40] D. Effect of Death of Pawnee. If the pawnee dies the pawn does not become absolute and irredeemable by the pawner merely because the goods were pawned generally, without any specified day for redemption.[1]

[§ 41] E. Effect of Redemption—1. By Pawner. Redemption by a pawner who is not the owner of the pawn before notice to,[2] or demand upon,[3] the pawnee by the true owner may not render the pawnee liable to the true owner for the value of the pawn.[4] But the rule does not apply where the pawn is redeemed by a third person,[5] even where he is the agent of the pawner and the person to whom the pawner has expressly authorized the pawnee to deliver the property.[6] The true owner who has made a demand on the pawnee for the pawn before redemption by the pawner may recover its value where the pawnee permits the pawner to redeem thereafter;[7] and this is the rule, even under a statute indemnifying the pawnee for delivery of the pawn to the holder of the pawn ticket.[8]

[a] Reason for rule.—Construing a statute which provided that, at the expiration of a year and a day from the date of the pawning, the pawn "shall be deemed forfeited, and may be sold," it was said: "The object of the sale is, to enable the pawnbroker to reimburse himself for the amount of the principal money advanced, and the interest due thereon. And if, before any sale takes place, the party pledging pays the pawnbroker his principal and interest, and expenses incurred; all the purposes of a sale are answered, and, consequently, the pawnbroker, in such a case, can have no right to sell. The words 'deemed forfeited and may be sold,' mean not that the things pledged shall become the absolute property of the pawnbroker, but only that they shall be so far forfeited as that the pawnbroker may take steps toward a sale." [a] Discussion of rule.—"In construing the provisions of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, some assistance will be derived from a clear understanding of the relations between the pawner and the pawnee independently of all statutory enactment. In the case of an ordinary pledge there is no doubt an implied undertaking on the part of the pledgee to redeliver to the pledger the article pledged on payment by the latter of the sum advanced, with interest; but there is on the other hand an implied undertaking on the part of the pledger that the property pledged is his own, or that he has the authority of the owner to pledge it, and that it may be safely delivered back to him. The undertaking on the part of the pledgee to redeliver, however, is not an absolute one, but is subject to this—that the pledger has the title he warrants himself to have, and if it turns out that he is not the owner, and had no authority from him to pledge, the pledgee may restore the property pledged to the person lawfully entitled to it. . . . Further assistance to a correct understanding of the statute, and the intention of the legislature will be acquired by bearing in mind one or two matters of common knowledge relating to pledges and pawn tickets. In the first place, it is a very common occurrence for a pawner to dispose by sale or gift of his pawn ticket to another person, with the intention to confer on the vendee or donee a right to redeem the article pledged; and by the accidents of life it constantly happens that the pawner loses or accidentally destroys his ticket, or has it stolen or fraudulently obtained from him. It is also a very common practice for the owners of articles upon which they desire to obtain loans to employ other persons to pledge such articles for them, in which case the person so employed, and who actually delivers the

The pawnee is not liable to the pawner for the value of a pawn delivered to a third person who produced and surrendered the pawn ticket, where it appears that the pawner was in the habit of sending articles to pawn and receiving them therefrom by the hands of third persons.[9] However, the pawnee is liable to the owner of a pawn for a redelivery to a third person upon presentation of the pawn ticket where the article was pawned without the knowledge or consent of the owner;[10] and this is the rule, even under a statute indemnifying the pawnee for delivery of the pawn to the holder of the pawn ticket.[11]

After loss of pawn ticket. Where the pawner, after loss of the pawn ticket, procures a duplicate ticket from the pawnee upon complying with the statutory procedure therefor,[12] he is not bound to redeem immediately,[13] and the pawnee cannot, pending such period for redemption, rightfully delive. the pawn to a person presenting the original ticket.[14]

[§ 43] b. Upon Others. A third person, who redeems the pawn, has been held to acquire no pawnbroker's lien upon it for the money he has expended.[15] However, since the sale of a pawn ticket is a commercial transaction,[16] a purchaser in good faith of the pawn from the bearer of the ticket, who has redeemed, cannot be dispossessed by the owner of the article so purchased, without an offer by the latter to repay the amount paid by the purchaser.[17]

VIII. SALE OF PAWN ON DEFAULT OF PAWNER

[§ 44] A. In General. A contract of pawn implies a right in the pawnee, upon default of the pawner, to sell the pledge for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the debt secured thereby.[18]

[§ 45] B. When Right Accrues. The pawn may not be disposed of by the pawnee before the expiration of the time for payment fixed by the contract of pawn.[19] The parties may extend the time for payment[20] and consequently the time for sale, by agreement,[21] which, if it makes the extension of time indefinite, cannot be terminated by a notice sent to the pawner demanding an excessive amount.[22] Hence, a sale by the pawnee before the expiration of the time fixed by the agreement renders him liable to the pawner for conversion of the pawn.[23] Under some statutes[24] the sale of the pawn may be forbidden for a specified time after the pawner's default of payment of interest[25] without the pawner's written consent thereto.[26]

[§ 46] C. Manner of—1. In General. In the absence of a statute[27] or an agreement[28] prescribing the manner of sale, the pawnee's right to sell the pawn[29] must be exercised by a public sale[30] after due notice of the pawnee's intention to sell and the time and place of sale.[31] Failure to comply with a statute requiring the filing of a report as to specified details of the sale of a defaulted pawn does not render the sale invalid where the statute merely pro-article to the pawnbroker, is in law the pawner, and in his name the ticket is made out, and it not rarely happens that this ticket is retained by the pawner, and not delivered over to the employing owner. It was to meet such and similar contingencies (among other things), that the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 . . . was passed—partly for the protection of pawnbrokers, partly also for the protection of pawners and owners of property pledged." Section 25 of that act enacts that "'the holder for the time being of a pawn ticket shall be presumed to be the person entitled to redeem the pledge, and subject to the provisions of this Act, the pawnbroker shall accordingly (on payment of the loan and profit) deliver the pledge to the person producing the pawn ticket, and he is hereby indemnified for so doing;' and it is followed immediately by § 26, which enacts that 'a pawnbroker shall not (except as in this Act provided) be bound to deliver back a pledge unless the pawn ticket for it is delivered to him.' It is clear to our mind that in these two sections the legislature intended only to provide for the delivery back of the article pledged to the person entitled to redeem, and as between the pawner and the pawnbroker to compel the latter to recognise, in the absence of grounds for belief to the contrary, the possessor of the ticket as the person so entitled, and to presume him to be the lawful holder of it without further investigation of his title; and, should it so happen that the ticket is presented and the pledge redeemed by a person who has in fact no title to the ticket, to protect and indemnify the pawnbroker against any claim by the real pawner, or anybody to whom he may have transferred his title, or the owner who has sanctioned the pledge. This construction seems to us to give full effect to, and to be the true interpretation of the 25th section. In our judgment that section in no degree affects an owner whose property has been pledged against his will. He is in no sense a person entitled to redeem the pledge, or privy to the contract of pawn. His claim rests on a title paramount, which is unaffected by the dealing between the pawnbroker and his customer. The 25th section does not say that the holder of the ticket shall be presumed to be the owner, but that he shall be presumed to be the person entitled to redeem, or in other words, the person entitled to represent the pawner whose title is altogether inconsistent with that of an owner whose property has been unlawfully pledged against his will. To our mind it is very clear that the legislature did not in the sections relating to the redemption of pledges intend prejudicially to affect the rights of such owners as we have last referred to." Singer Mfg. Co. v. Clark, 5 Ex. D. 37, 42, 44.

[b] The indemnity given by the statute "is limited to and protects the pawnbroker only against the pawner, the owner who has authorized the pledge, and all those who claim title under them . . . none of the provisions of the statute were intended to affect nor do they affect the common law right of an owner of property pledged against his will who claims by title paramount to that of the pawner." [a] Sufficiency of notice.—A notice sent to the pawnee that the pawn will be sold unless an excessive sum

vides penalties for its violation but fails to forbid transactions not in compliance therewith.[32]

[§ 47] 2. Pawnee as Trustee for Sale. In executing his power of sale the pawnee becomes the trustee of the pawner.[33] The sale over which he has control as trustee must be conducted fairly and in good faith and in such a way as to subserve, not only the rights that he has, but also the highest interest of the pawner.[34] The pawnee, therefore, is not permitted to become a purchaser of the pawn without the pawner's express consent.[35] However, such a purchase is only prima facie voidable and it is valid unless repudiated within a reasonable time by the pawner.[36]

[§ 48] 3. Effect of Special Agreement. A special agreement between the parties to a contract of pawn controlling the manner of sale, after default on the part of the pawner, is valid and binding.[37]

[§ 49] D. Surplus. Under some statutes[38] the pawnee must pay over the surplus arising on the sale of the pawn to the person entitled to redeem.[39] Under these statutes a particular pawn stands as security only for the amount advanced in that transaction and interest thereon, and the pawnee has no right to apply a surplus arising on the sale of the pawn in payment of any deficiency arising on the sale of an article pawned by him at a different time by the same person.[40]

[§ 50] E. Pawner's Liability for Deficiency. At common law the pawner is liable to the pawnee for any deficiency arising on the sale of the article pawned,[41] in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary.[42] A pawnee does not lose his right to recover from the pawner a deficiency arising from the sale of the pawn by the insertion of false information in the pawn ticket, where such information was derived from the pawner and was inserted in good faith.[43] However, where it appears under a construction of the statute governing pawnbrokers that the pawnee advanced money exclusively upon the security of the property pawned, and not upon the personal credit of the pawner, the latter is not liable for any deficiency arising upon a sale of the pawn.[44]

[§ 51] F. Rights of Purchasers. A pawnee who sells a forfeited pawn to a third party merely undertakes that the article sold is a pawn and irredeemable, and that he is not cognizant of any defect of title to it.[45] A statute permitting the pawnee to purchase at auction a forfeited pawn put on sale by him for nonpayment of the debt and declaring that on such purchase the pawnee shall be deemed the absolute owner of the pawn purchased applies only as between the pawner and the pawnee,[46] and gives no property in the pawn to the purchasing pawnee as against the true owner.[47]

IX. PERSONAL LIABILITY OF PAWNER FOR LOAN

[§ 52] At common law the pawner is liable to the pawnee for his debt after a loss of the pawn, if the pawnee has been duly diligent.[48] A restoration of the pawn is a condition without which a recovery cannot be had for the debt where the pawnee does not show that the loss was in nowise attributable to any want of necessary care on his part.[49] Where, under a construction of the statute governing pawnbrokers and the transaction between the parties, the loan is made solely upon the security of the property pawned and not upon the personal credit of the pawner,[50] there exists no personal liability in the pawner to the pawnee for the amount of the loan.[51]

X. ACTIONS

[§ 53] A. By Pawner against Pawnee. Where the pawner deliberately violates statutory or ordinance provisions regulating transactions with pawnbrokers,[52] no cause of action[53] to recover the pawn[54] or its value[55] arises against the pawnee, whether[56] be paid immediately is not such notice as will justify a sale. Pigot v. Cubley, 15 C. B. N. S. 701, 109 ECL 701, 143 Reprint 960.

or not[57] the pawnee participates in the violation of the statute. However, the pawner is not deprived of his right of action against the pawnee for conversion of the pawn because he has repurchased the pawn from an innocent purchaser of the pawnee.[58]

Conditions precedent. The pawner need not tender[59] the loan and interest to the pawnee in order to maintain an action for conversion[60] against him, where the latter refuses to deliver the pawn on demand on the ground that another claims an interest therein,[61] or where the transaction is void for exaction of usurious interest.[62] However, where an exaction of usurious interest does not render the whole contract void,[63] a tender of the amount of the original loan is essential to a recovery by the pawner.[64] Where, under a pawn contract providing for an unlawful rate of interest, the pawnee has paid the pawner more than the equivalent of the original sum loaned and lawful interest thereon at the time suit is commenced, he is entitled to replevin the pawn without further payment.[65]

Parties.[66] Under some code provisions[67] claimants of some interest in the pawn,[68] although not necessary parties,[69] may be brought in as parties in the pawner's action against the pawnee for conversion.[70]

Pleading.[71] The complainant in the pawner's action for conversion of the pawn must state the essential elements of the cause of action.[72] The complaint is liberally construed.[73]

Evidence.[74] In the pawner's action for the value of a pawn, in case of its loss, the burden of proof rests upon the pawnee to show due care in keeping the pawn.[75] Where the pawnee has purchased the pawn at his own sale and the pawner sues him for its conversion, the former has the burden of showing procedure according to law[76] and with the utmost good faith.[77] General rules as to the admissibility[78] and sufficiency[79] of evidence apply in such actions.

Trial.[80] General rules as to the instructions[81] and questions for the jury[82] apply in a pawner's action against a pawnee.

[§ 54] B. By Third Person against Pawnee. The true owner[83] of the pawn may maintain an action to recover the pawn[84] or its value[85] against the pawnee where the article pawned was stolen[86] or embezzled[87] by the pawner or was pawned without the owner's authority therefor.[88]

Conditions precedent. The true owner of the pawn must pay[89] or tender[90] the amount due to the pawnee before he can maintain an action against him to recover the property pawned. The true owner need not present the pawn ticket with his demand for the goods as a condition precedent to an action for the value of the pawn as he claims by a title paramount to that of the pawner.[91]

Retention of pawn against true

Evidence.[92] In an action by the true owner against the pawnee, the burden of proof rests upon the party asserting the affirmative of an issue.[93] The owner's presentation of the pawn ticket is prima facie evidence of his title to the pawn,[94] where the ticket recites that the pawn may be delivered to any person presenting the ticket.[95] General rules as to the admissibility[96] and sufficiency[97] of evidence apply.

Trial.[98] General rules as to instructions,[99] submission of issues to the jury,[1] questions for the jury,[2] and findings[3] apply in the owner's action against the pawnee.

[§ 55] C. By Pawnee against Third Persons. The pawnee may recover damages from a third person who induced him to deliver the pawn where the pawner obtained judgment against him for conversion by reason of such delivery.[4] Where a landlord distrains for rent goods deposited in pawn, the pawnee may maintain an action against the landlord for their value.[5]

XI. PENALTIES[6]

[§ 56] Where the statute expressly imposes a penalty to indemnify the party injured,[7] the pawnee may proceed to recover a penalty from a pawner who wrongfully pawned the goods of another which the pawnee was compelled to restore to the true owner.[8] The pawnee is not precluded from proceeding under such a statute by reason of the pawner's prior conviction of larceny for the same transaction.[9] A common informer, although not the party aggrieved, has been held a proper complainant in a proceeding to recover a statutory penalty.[10]

XII. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS[11]

[§ 57] A. Offenses. Statutes and ordinances regulating the business of pawnbrokers[12] usually provide for criminal prosecution for the violation of their provisions.[13] Such statutory and ordinance provisions are penal in their nature[14] and are construed strictly.[15] Under some statutes and ordinances,[16] to pursue the occupation of pawnbroker[17] without a license[18] or in violation of regulatory provisions[19] is punishable[20] as a misdemeanor.[21] Under statutes fixing a maximum rate of interest,[22] a pawnbroker is not punishable for merely entering upon the pawn ticket a rate in excess thereof where he does not in fact accept more than the correct amount from the pawner.[23] A charge for storage, in addition to the maximum rate, is not punishable under the statute in the absence of express provision therefor.[24] A pawnbroker, who acting honestly has lost the article pawned, is not liable to conviction under statutory provisions[25] creating an offense for neglecting or refusing to deliver a pawn to the person entitled thereto, without reasonable excuse.[26] The pawnbroker's negligence causing a loss of the pawn is not a violation of such statutory provisions,[27] since they apply only to the pawnbroker's refusal to restore the pawn on demand.[28]

[§ 58] B. Persons Liable. Engaging in acts essential to the transaction of his business renders a pawnbroker punishable for failure to obtain a license,[29] but a person who makes a business of purchasing goods under a contract whereby he gives to the seller a right of repurchase at an increased price does not thereby exercise the trade of a pawnbroker, and is not liable to criminal prosecution for failure to obtain a license.[30]

Pawnbroker's clerk is not punishable for failure to make a required daily report of the record of pawn transactions to a designated police official,[31] even where the clerk was present when an unre-

to.[3]

As meaning "vested." In many cases where a bequest, gift, or settlement is to be given to a person on his coming of age or marrying, but is conditioned to go elsewhere if such person die before it shall be payable, "payable" is construed to mean "vested."[4]

Phrases: "Amount otherwise payable,"[5] "[bond] payable to the county judge,"[6] "due and payable,"[7] "made and payable in this state,"[8] "not be payable,"[9] "payable after sight,"[10] "payable as convenient,"[11] "payable as it accrues,"[12] "payable at a determinable future time,"[13] "payable 'at bank,'"[14] "payable at the rate of $50 per month,"[15] "payable in cash,"[16] "payable in equal annual installments,"[17] "payable in money only,"[18] "payable in one and two years,"[19] "payable in one year,"[20] "payable [in pledged stock at par],"[21] "payable in the currency of Virginia and North Carolina money,"[22] "payable in trade,"[23] "payable 'in United States bonds,'"[24] "payable monthly,"[25] "payable on demand,"[26] "payable on or before one year,"[27] "payable on presentation of invoice,"[28] "payable quarterly,"[29] "payable through the Citizens Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate,"[30] "payable to bearer,"[31] "[payable to] cash or order,"[32] "payable to my estate,"[33] "payable to order,"[34] "payable when in funds,"[35] "subject to taxes and special assessments levied and payable after the year A. PAY CHECK. A term which is said to mean practically the same thing as "money order."[38]

PAY DIRT.[39] A stratum of gold-bearing earth and gravel which can be removed at a profit over and above the necessary expense of extracting it.[40]

PAYEE.[41] A person to whom payment is made;[42] any person to whom a debt should be paid.[43] It is clearly opposed to the word "payor"[44] as "vendee" is to "vendor," "mortgagee" to "mortgagor," and "indorsee" to "indorsor."[45] In its statutory use it may have a technical and definite meaning, and apply only to bills and notes.[46]

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE

[By EUSTACE W. TOMLINSON]

[§ 1] A. In General. The term "payment," in its more restricted legal sense, may be defined as the discharge in money of a sum due,[1] or the performance of a pecuniary obligation.[2] In its more general acceptation, however, the term may mean the fulfillment of a promise,[3] the performance of an agreement,[4] the satisfaction of a claim,[5] the discharge of a liability,[6] or the accomplishment of an obligation,[7] whether by giving or by doing.[8] In some jurisdictions it has been defined by statute.[9]

As used in its ordinary legal sense, payment involves an actual or constructive delivery,[10] by a

[a] Similar definitions.—(1) The term "payment," in legal import, means the satisfaction of a debt by money, not by exchange, novation, compromise, or accord and satisfaction. Roach v. McDonald, 187 Ala. 64, 65 S 823; Claflin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27, 11 SE 721; City Sav. Bank v. Stevens, 59 N. Y. Super. 549, 15 NYS 139; Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 10 N. Y. (2) "It may be defined as the discharge of indebtedness by delivery of money or its equivalent to the creditor." Bartholomew v. Emerson-Brantingham Impl. Co., 68 Colo. 244, 245, 187 P 538.

Money as medium of payment in general see infra § 15.

2. Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167, 42 NW 790.

[a] Other definitions.—(1) "A mode of extinguishing a debt." Alabama Western R. Co. v. Foshee, 183 Ala. 182, 189, 62 S 500; Bradford v. Richard, 46 La. Ann. 1530, 1534, 16 S 487. (2) "A mode of extinguishing obligations." Jenkins v. Mapes, 53 Oh. St. 110, 115, 41 NE 137; Cranston v. West Coast L. Ins. Co., 63 Or. 427, 437, 128 P 427; Bardsley v. Sternberg, 18 Wash. 612, 617, 52 P 251, 524. (3) "The act of paying." State v. Haun, 7 Kan. A. 509, 54 P 130, 132; Moumal v. Parkhurst, 89 Or. 248, 252, 173 P 669. (4) "The discharge of a debt." Binford v. Adams, 104 Ind. 41, 3 NE 753. (5) "The discharge of an obligation by the delivery and acceptance of money or of something equivalent to money which is regarded as such at the time by the party to whom the payment is due." Cranston v. West Coast L. Ins. Co., supra. To same effect Brady v. Wasson, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 131. (6) "A transfer of money from one person who is the payer to another who is the payee in satisfaction of a debt." Moumal v. Parkhurst, supra. (7) "The delivery of money by one person from whom it is due to another person to whom it is due." Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161, 166. (8) "The delivery of money as payment in the course of business." State v. Haun, 7 Kan. A. 509, 54 P 130, 132. (9) "A transfer of property from one person to another." Moulton v. Robinson, 27 N. H. 550.

[b] The existence of a debt is implied in the term "payment," and its satisfaction when the payment is complete. In re Tennessee Bond Cases, 114 U. S. 663, 5 SCt 974, 1098, 29 L. ed. 281; Tuttle v. Armstead, 53 Conn. 175, 22 A 677.

[c] "Payment" is not a technical term, and has been imported into law proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises. Ablett Co. v. Sencer, 130 Misc. 416, 224 NYS 251; Root v. Kelley, 39 Misc. 530, 80 NYS 482; Maillard v. Argyle, 6 M. & G. 40, 46 ECL 40, 134 Reprint 801 (per Maule, J.). To same effect Jennings v. Willis, 22 Ont. 439.

[d] Double meaning.—(1) "Payment" is used in two senses: meaning both performance of a contract to pay money according to its stipulations, and extinguishment of a cause of action arising from breach of the contract. "Payment" as generally used in the books has the latter meaning, and "the defence of payment" is usually of the same import, denoting a new affirmative and independent fact set up by defendant in confession and avoidance and not a denial of the breach. Kendall v. Brownson, 47 N. H. 186. (2) Payment as a defense see infra §§ 132–153.

[e] Exclusion of idea of refunding.—The term "payment," when used voluntarily and with full knowledge of the facts, excludes the idea of an implied promise to refund. Morton v. Chandler, 6 Me. 142, 144.

"Settlement" as payment see Compromise and Settlement § 1 note 3; Settlement [35 Cyc 1443 text and notes 14–17, 19–22].

tutes payment depends largely upon the intention of the parties;[18] and acts which might otherwise constitute payment will not do so when the parties do not so intend.[19] Where a debtor delivers money or property for the purpose of paying one debt, and the creditor receiving it understands that it is in payment of another, neither debt is discharged;[20] and where it is delivered and accepted as payment of a debt which does not exist, it does not discharge another debt between the same parties.[21]

Delivery to a creditor of his own money or property cannot be regarded as a payment,[22] although accepted as such by him, in ignorance of the facts.[23]

Payment is not a contract, but the discharge of an obligation or debt.[24]

Phrases in which the term is used have received judicial interpretation, such as "part payment,"[25] "immediate payment,"[26] "payment down,"[27] "pay-

"In a payment, we ordinarily look only to the act of the party making it; but yet its legal import is an act in which the debtor tenders and the creditor accepts that which is offered." Thompson v. Kellogg, 23 Mo. 281, 285.

[a] Payment, like a sale, can result only from the mutual agreement of the parties that the transaction shall have that effect, and without such consent the transaction cannot be treated by the court as a payment. [b] The mere intimation by the creditor of a willingness to receive it, without actual reception of it, is not a payment. Thompson v. Kellogg, 23 Mo. 281.

[c] Mere possession of debtor's funds by creditor not payment.—(1) Although money belonging to the debtor is in the hands of the creditor or his representative for the purpose of being applied to the debt, there is no payment unless the money is appropriated by the creditor or his representative as a payment. Hatch v. Hutchinson, 64 Ark. 119, 40 SW 578; Bronson v. Rugg, 39 Vt. 241. Compare O'Conner v. Bernard, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 572; Grandy v. Abbott, 92 N. C. 33 (both holding that, if the debtor places claims due him in the hands of his creditor, agreeing that collections shall go to the discharge of the debt, money collected is deemed applied eo instanti). (2) Thus the failure of a creditor's agent, who had been employed by the debtor to make collections to discharge the debt, before a distinct act of appropriation, casts the loss upon the debtor. Phillips v. Mayer, 7 Cal. 81. (3) And the deposit in a creditor bank by the debtor of proceeds of sale to be applied to notes held by the creditor, where the creditor is not directed to make application of the deposit on the notes, is not a payment. Randall v. Pettes, 12 Fla. 517. (4) Where the agent of the creditor, with power to collect the interest and principal of a mortgage debt against the debtor, procured a loan at the instance of the debtor to be used in paying the mortgage, but himself embezzled the money, its receipt by the agent was not a payment, especially where the debtor did not know when the agent received the money and never expressly directed him to apply it to the mortgage. Boardman v. Blizzard, 36 Fed. 26. (5) A direction by the debtor to one who is the agent both of the debtor and of the creditor, to apply money in the agent's hands to the payment of the debt, does not of itself constitute an application of the money. Moore v. Norman, 52 Minn. 83, 53 NW 809, 38 AmSR 526, 18 LRA 359.

18. Luckenbach v. W. J. McCahan Sugar Refining Co., 248 U. S. 139, 39 SCt 53, 63 L. ed. 170 [mod 235 Fed. 388, 148 CCA 650]; Central Trust Co. v. Cassidy, 300 Fed. 386; Davis v. Snyder, 248 Mass. 387, 143 NE 319.

[a] Money delivered for another purpose.—(1) A creditor cannot lawfully pay himself with the debtor's money, without the debtor's consent, express or implied, and when the debtor delivers him money for a purpose which negatives the idea of payment, and he applies it on his debt, there is no payment: Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 112, 15 NW 39. (2) Where an attorney obtained from his client the possession of money paid to him in compromise of a claim, for the purpose of counting the money, and thereupon said he would keep it and apply it on account, but on resistance and remonstrance on the part of the client handed it back to him, no payment to the attorney was effectuated. Pennsylvania Co. v. Thatcher, 78 Oh. St. 175, 85 NE 55. (3) Where the guarantor of a note executed by a corporation deposited the amount with the bank which owned the note, under an express agreement that the deposit was to be security, and not payment, the bank undertaking to prosecute suits against the stockholders of the corporation, no payment was effectuated. Guerney v. Moore, 131 Mo. 650, 32 SW 1132.

[b] Delivery of counterfeit money to be passed off generally for the benefit of the parties is not a payment so as to violate a statute prohibiting the passing of such money in payment. U. S. v. Venable, 28 F. Cas. No. 16,615, 1 Cranch C. C. 416.

[c] Cashing check held as security.—Where one liable as indorser on unpaid checks delivered to the bank his check as security to guarantee the bank against loss in enforcing payment of such checks, the fact that the bank cashed the check and held its proceeds instead of retaining the paper itself does not warrant the conclusion that a payment was effectuated. International Trust Co. v. Paige Motor Car Co., 224 Mass. 95, 112 NE 484.

In re Brockville Election, 32 U. C. Q. B. (Ont.) 132.

21. Bestwick v. Ormsby Coal Co., 129 Pa. 592, 18 A 538.

[a] Debt due in representative instead of individual capacity.—Where royalties for coal mined were paid and accepted in the belief that the land from which it was mined belonged to the payee individually, when in fact it belonged to him as trustee for third persons, the debt due the trust estate was not discharged. Bestwick v. Ormsby Coal Co., 129 Pa. 592, 18 A 538.

25. Wenger v. Grummel, 136 Md. 80, 110 A 206 (holding that, as used in the statute of frauds, the terms "earnest" and "part payment" have the same meaning); Young v. Perkins, 29 Minn. 173, 174, 12 NW 515 (holding that the term is equivalent to "payment of a part"; "payment of a part of a larger subsisting debt, as a part thereof"); Waters v. Tompkins, 2 C. M. & R. 723, 150 Reprint 306; Stark v. Somerville, 41 Ont. L. 591, 41 DomLR 496 (both holding that part payment is the payment of a smaller, on account of a greater, sum, due from the person making the payment to him to whom it is made).

[§ 2] B. Other Transactions Distinguished.[40] Payment is ordinarily to be distinguished from other transactions whereby a liability or obligation is terminated by the intention of the parties.[41]

A cross demand is not payment,[42] and can be made such only by the agreement of the parties.[43]

A set-off, although clearly established, is not payment,[44] and is distinguishable therefrom in that it is an independent demand, calling for its own action, whereas a payment is by consent or agreement of the parties, express or implied, appropriated to the discharge of the debt or obligation;[45] and accordingly a set-off can only become payment by agreement of the parties so to treat it and liquidate it.[46]

"Collection" is not a word of similar import to "payment."[47]

"Satisfaction" is a broader term than "payment," for while payment works satisfaction of an obligation, satisfaction may be accomplished without payment.[48]

Prescription and payment are entirely distinct methods of discharging obligations,[49] since payment completely discharges the natural, as well as the civil, obligation, but prescription does not.[50]

Purchase of debt. The essential difference between purchasing a debt and paying it consists not in what is done nor in the manner of doing it, but in the intention with which the consideration is paid and accepted, whether to extinguish the debt or to keep it alive.[51]

A promise to pay is not payment, as the agree-

28. Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 37 (holding that a cash payment is not necessarily payment in money, but in ordinary parlance is understood in contradistinction to a credit payment, and there is no more reason for supposing that the one is to be made in money than the other); Breck v. Barney, 183 Mass. 133, 136, 66 NE 643 (holding that the payment to a trust by transferring or cancelling credits due from the trust to the payor is a payment in cash; and that a check afterward paid by the drawee is a payment in cash. "What is in law a payment is a payment in cash"); Hart v. Wyndmere, 21 N. D. 383, 131 NW 271, AnnCas1913D 169 (holding that delivery by a municipality of its warrants is a payment in cash, within a contract calling for cash payment, the municipality having power to make payments only by warrants); Turner v. Cowan, 9 B. C. 301 (holding that the transfer by a partner of his interest in the partnership business to a corporation organized to take it over, in return for shares of stock in the corporation, is a payment in cash for the stock). And see Corporations §§ 594–601.

29. Adler v. Burton Lumber Co., 46 La. Ann. 379, 15 S 156 (holding that a receipt of payment in notes implies, not a payment absolutely, but the giving of notes to represent the payment).

30. McKinley v. American Exch. Bank, 30 N. Y. Super. 663 (holding that writing the words "payment stopped" upon a note payable at a bank simply announces the maker's intention that his funds in that bank shall not be applied to the payment of the note, and does not necessarily discredit the note nor import that he will not provide for it at some other place). And see Banks and Banking § 429.

Daimler Co., Ltd., [1915] 1 K. B. 893 (holding that payment to an English corporation of which all but one of the shares were held by Germans is not payment to or for the benefit of an enemy, where war existed between England and Germany).

38. Jackson v. Industrial Commn., 302 Ill. 281, 134 NE 749 (holding that payments to a hospital for surgical, medical, and hospital services rendered to an injured employee are payments of compensation within a provision of a workmen's compensation act barring the filing of a claim more than a specified time after the last payment); Baade v. Omaha Flour Mills Co., (Nebr.) 225 NW 117 (to same effect); Paolis v. Tower Hill Connellsville Coke Co., 265 Pa. 291, 108 A 638; Petraska v. National Acme Co., 95 Vt. 76, 113 A 536 (both reaching the contrary conclusion).

39. Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Camden, [1915] A. C. 241 (holding that sums expended by a lessee under the terms of his lease in improving the demised property are "payments made in consideration of the lease," within a statute providing that the value of land is to be ascertained on the basis of the rent received and payments made in consideration of the lease); Inland Revenue Comrs. v. St. John's College, [1915] 2 K. B. 621 (holding that the surrender of an unexpired term and the acceptance of a new lease for a longer term is not a payment made in consideration of the lease).

II. MANNER, TIME, AND PLACE

[By Eustace W. Tomlinson]

[§ 3] A. Who May Make Payment.[53] Payment may be made by the primary debtor,[54] and may be made by persons secondarily liable under circumstances considered elsewhere in this work.[55] Any one of two or more joint debtors may pay a debt for which they are jointly liable.[56]

Stranger or volunteer. The mere delivery of money or property by a stranger to an obligation does not discharge the debt or inure to the benefit of the debtor,[57] except when it is so provided by statute;[58] but if such delivery is received or accepted by the creditor as a payment on account of the debt the debtor is discharged pro tanto,[59] at least upon ratification of the transaction by him.[60] If, however, he refuses to ratify it no payment is effectuated and the debt stands unpaid as to him.[61]

[§ 4] B. To Whom Payment May Be Made[62]—1. In General. Broadly speaking, payment of a debt may be made only to the creditor,[63] or to his assignee,[64] or to some one else to whom he di-

[a] In Louisiana (1) under Civ. Code (old) art 2130, a debt may be discharged by a third person in no way concerned in it, provided he act in the name, and for the discharge, of the debt, or if he act in his own name and be not subrogated to the right of the creditor. State v. Pilsbury, 29 La. Ann. 787. To same effect Smith v. Vinson, 7 La. A. 309. (2) "It is true that the payment of a debt which is to be acquitted in money, is permitted to be made by a third person, even one not interested. The right thus to pay is absolute; it may be exercised not only against the will of the creditor, but without the knowledge and even against the opposition of the debtor; because on the one hand the creditor has no interest and consequently no right to refuse a regular and satisfactory payment, and it is a matter of indifference whence the money comes, and because, on the other hand, it is permitted to every one, by a kind of 'fraternal mandate,' to ameliorate the condition of another, even without his knowledge and against his will. . . . This rule of the Roman law . . . has been continued in . . . article 2130 of the Code of Louisiana." Germon v. McCan, 23 La. Ann. 84, 87.

[b] In Quebec anyone may pay the debt of another, under Civ. Code art 1141, providing that payment may be made by any person, although he is a stranger to the obligation, and the creditor may be put in default by the offer of a stranger to perform the obligation on the part of the debtor without the knowledge of the latter; but it must be for the advantage of the debtor and not merely to change the creditor that the performance of the obligation is so offered. [a] In New York, however (1) a payment by a third person is effectual only when made by him as agent for, or on account of, the debtor, and with the prior authority or subsequent ratification of the latter. Danziger v. Hoyt, 120 N. Y. 190, 24 NE 294; Atlantic Dock Co. v. New York, 53 N. Y. 64; Wilmot Engineering Co. v. Blanchard, 208 App. Div. 218, 203 NYS 700. Compare Warner v. Powers, 199 App. Div. 475, 480, 192 NYS 141 (where it was said: "It is true that payment by a stranger would not be deemed payment so as to prevent a recovery. But payment by the principal for whose benefit this stock was bought is clearly payment of the liability of the agent . . . and satisfied the liability"). (2) It was formerly the unqualified rule that the satisfaction of a debt by a person not the debtor did not extinguish the debt. Wilmot Engineering Co. v. Blanchard, supra (so stating); Bleakley v. [a] Creditor's assignee for benefit of creditors.—(1) Payment to the general assignee of the creditor, to whom his assets have been assigned for the benefit of his creditors, is a good defense, although the payor knows that the assignee was enjoined not to pay or receive money. Kelley v. Cowing, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 266. (2) Effect of assignment for benefit of creditors on debt due, and payment

rects,[65] or consents,[66] or has theretofore agreed,[67] that it be paid, or whom he expressly or by implication authorizes to receive it,[68] or who holds a lien or right paramount to that of the creditor;[69] and payment to any other person is ineffectual to extinguish the debt or discharge the debtor,[70] unless otherwise provided by statute.[71]

Joint creditors. Where two or more persons are joint creditors, payment may ordinarily be made to any of them,[72] even though some are minors,[73] unless it is otherwise agreed by all the parties.[74] To entitle the debtor to make payment to a third person, however, it has been held that both or all the joint creditors must agree or consent thereto.[75]

Obligation for benefit of third person. Payment to the person with whom or in whose name was made the contract under which the obligation arises, although it is for the benefit of another, is ordinarily sufficient;[76] but it would seem that a payment to the real beneficiary will also discharge the debt.[77]

(2) provided such order is actually paid (McCormack v. Phillips, 4 Dak. 506, 34 NW 39). But see Best v. Jenkins, 14 Sask. L. 153, [1921] 1 WestWkly 527 (holding that, where the agreed place of payment of a debt was not that of the residence of the creditor and he had no agent there to receive the money at the time it was payable, the debtor was within his legal rights in paying the money into a bank to the credit of the creditor, giving notice to him of such deposit, and such act constituted a payment to the creditor).

"Money deposited by a debtor with a third person, or in a bank, for the benefit of his creditor, without the authority of the creditor, is not payment of a debt, nor can the neglect of the creditor in not calling or drawing for it in a reasonable time, make it payment." Compare Shrewsbury v. Shrewsbury, 23 T. L. R. 277 (holding that, where a creditor directed payment to be made by depositing the amount thereof in a bank, the debtor was bound to make payment by so depositing it, and a tender otherwise made was properly refused by the creditor's agent).

[a] Whether or not the creditor has an account at the bank, and whether or not he has given instructions at the bank regarding the money, is immaterial so far as the debtor is concerned when the creditor has directed or consented that payment shall be made by depositing the money in the bank. Davis v. Snyder, 248 Mass. 387, 143 NE 319.

[b] Payment is effectuated at the time of the deposit, where the creditor consents or agrees that it may be so made, and not merely at the time the creditor draws upon the depositary or receives the money from him. Miner v. Excelsior L. Assur. Co., 3 Alta. L. 249, 16 WestLR 698.

[c] Requirement by depositary that creditor sign receipt before receiving money deposited by a debtor under an agreement providing for payment in such manner does not defeat the efficacy of the deposit as a payment, the requirement of a receipt being the depositary's method of doing business, for which the debtor is not responsible. Lovett v. Eastern Oil Co., 68 W. Va. 667, 70 SE 707, AnnCas1912B 360.

[d] Mere error in the name of the creditor for whom money is deposited (1) under an agreement that payment should be made by such deposit does not defeat the payment, where the variance was merely one of orthography and the names were idem sonans. [§ 7] C. Time.[92] As a strict rule of law, a payment agreed to be made at a particular time must be made at such time,[93] and, on the one hand, a debtor who fails then to pay is in default,[94] and, on the other, a creditor is not bound to receive payment before such time.[95] The right to receive payment at the time it is due may, however, be waived by the creditor,[96] and a payment may be accepted before it is due,[97] or the time of payment may be extended or a default waived,[98] as by agreement,[99] or by taking a postdated check or promissory note for the amount of the debt,[1] or by demanding payment at a later date;[2] and, in general, the time of payment is not ordinarily treated as of the essence of the contract,[3] although it may be such.[4]

Debt payable on demand. Where a debt is payable upon demand, the debtor is entitled to a reasonable time after demand in which to make payment, unless it is otherwise agreed.[5]

Payment within specified term. Where a debt is payable within a specified term, payment is not due until the last day of the term.[6]

Time of day. Where a debt is payable upon a particular day, the debtor has the entire day in which to make payment,[7] or, as it has been held, the time of payment is the last convenient hour of the day for transacting the business.[8]

Where no time is fixed for the payment of a debt, it is payable immediately on demand[9] or within a reasonable time.[10]

Deposit in bank. Where a debtor is authorized to make payment by depositing money in a bank or with a third person,[11] a deposit before the debt is due and payable is sufficient.[12]

Rejection of medium tendered. If a debtor has been led by his creditor to suppose that a particular medium would be received as payment, and a tender of such medium is rejected, the debtor is entitled to a reasonable time to convert it into money or the medium for which the contract calls.[13]

[§ 8] D. Place[14]—1. In General. As a general rule, in the absence of any agreement or stipulation to the contrary, a debt is payable at the place where the creditor resides,[15] or at his place of business, thority to apply the money to other debts, and did so).

[a] Conditional deposit.—A payment of money into a banking house to be placed to the credit of another, upon a condition the money in the meantime to stand in the bankers' books in the name of the party paying it in, is at his risk, and the loss is his, if the bankers fail before the condition is complied with, although the creditor had written to desire it to be paid in generally. present in person or by agent to receive it.[23] Where a debt is payable at either of two or more places, payment must be made wholly in one place or another and not in part at each place.[24] The right to demand payment at a particular place is waived, however, by objecting to a tender made elsewhere for other reasons than that it is made at an improper place.[25]

[§ 9] 2. Remittance by Mail or Other Carrier. Payment is not effectuated by sending the amount due to the creditor by mail[26] or other public carrier[27] until the remittance gets into the hands of the creditor, unless he expressly or by implication directs or consents that payment be so made,[28] or such mode of payment is according to the usual course of dealings between the parties, from which the creditor's assent can be inferred.[29] When the debtor is so authorized, the remittance must be made in the manner and with the precautions, if any, prescribed by the creditor, in order to absolve the debtor from the risk of loss in transmission;[30] and if it is impossible for the debtor to comply with the directions of the creditor he cannot make the remittance at the creditor's risk.[31] If no special or unusual formalities are required by the creditor a deposit in the mail or with the carrier in the ordinary manner is sufficient.[32] A mere general direction by a creditor to his debtor to remit money to him does not ordinarily constitute a direction or consent that remittance be made by mail at the creditor's risk,[33] although under some circumstances it has been held so to do;[34] and a direction that a particular remittance be made by mail does not of itself authorize the debtor to make other remittances in such manner,[35] nor does the fact that in a previous instance remittance has been made by mail without objection on the part of the creditor.[36]

[§ 10] E. Part Payment.[37] In the absence of any agreement so providing a creditor is not required to accept payment of a part or less than the whole of his debt;[38] but he may at his option accept payment of an amount less than that due,[39] and if he does so the debt is discharged pro tanto.[40] An agreement under which the debtor is entitled to pay all or any part of the debt during a prescribed period before it becomes due does not restrict the privilege of payment to a single occasion,[41] and part payments may be made at any time within such period.[42]

ditional payment" may be used in either of two senses.[43] It may designate a payment offered upon a condition,[44] which does not effectuate payment until the condition is fulfilled or accepted by the creditor,[45] and which must be accepted, if at all, cum onere;[46] or, more properly, it may mean the acceptance by the creditor of a particular sum or medium upon a condition,[47] in which case, also, no payment is effectuated until the condition has been fulfilled[48] or waived,[49] although it may then relate back to the time of acceptance.[50] If money is advanced to the debtor by a third person to pay the debt, on the debtor's note on which the creditor is a surety, the payment is a conditional one, so that if the creditor is compelled to pay the note the debt is not discharged.[51]

[§ 12] G. Payment Wrongfully Made or Obtained.[52] In general, a creditor who has been paid cannot compel a second payment on the ground that the debtor paid him with money wrongfully obtained;[53] and a creditor who has procured payment by an unlawful act cannot invoke the illegality to enforce a second payment.[54]

[§ 13] H. Fund from Which Payment Is To Be Made.[55] It is competent for the debtor and creditor to contract for the payment of an obligation out of a particular fund,[56] and when a fund from which payment is so agreed to be made is or becomes exhausted no recovery can be had by the creditor;[57] but the mere fact that the parties expected that payment would be made from a particular fund does not relieve the debtor from liability upon the exhaustion of the fund.[58] Where several funds are held by a debtor in different capacities, the intention of the parties governs in determining from which fund a payment is to be made.[59]

[§ 14] I. Effective Date of Payment. Payment is effectuated as of the time the money or property delivered to the creditor is accepted as payment or treated by him as such;[60] and so, where a creditor, refusing to receive a partial payment, but consenting to hold a sum tendered until the balance shall be paid, applies the money to his own use, the debtor is entitled to have his debt credited pro tanto as of the time the money was so used by the creditor.[61] Where a particular sum or medium is received as conditional payment, and the condition is thereafter performed or fulfilled, payment ordinarily relates back to the time of such receipt.[62]

III. FORM AND MEDIUM*[63]

[§ 15] A. In General. In the absence of an agreement otherwise providing, or the consent of the creditor to receive some other medium,[64] payment may be made only in money;[65] and a statute authorizing payment to be made in another medium than money at the debtor's option has been held unconstitutional as an effort to make a debt dischargeable by something else than legal tender.[66]

[§ 16] B. What Law Governs.[67] In accordance with the general rules relating to the performance of contracts,[68] the form and medium of payment is governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which payment is to be made,[69] unless otherwise agreed, expressly or by implication.[70] Thus a contract or obligation for the payment of money, performable in a country other than that in which it is made, is payable in the lawful money of the foreign country,[71] except when a different money is specified by agreement.[72] Whether or not the acceptance of a

"Such payments, in my opinion, are controlled by the law of the place where the contract is to be performed, and any question with relation to the character of the money in which payment is made, if not specified, must be in the currency of the country where the payment is to be made or contract fulfilled, and that it was entered into in a foreign country does not alter the rule." New York, etc., Co. v. Davis, 8 F. (2d) 662, 663. To same effect Mountain Lumber Co. v. Davis, 9 F. (2d) 478 [aff 11 F. (2d) 219 (certiorari den 271 U. [b] Insurance policy.—Under a statute providing that, where assured was a person domiciled in Nova Scotia and the policy has been delivered to him there, it shall be deemed to evidence a contract made in Nova Scotia, and all moneys payable under it shall be paid in lawful money of Canada, a policy of insurance on the life of a resident of Nova Scotia, made and, by its terms, payable in New York, must be paid in legal tender of Canada to an amount equivalent to the amount of the policy calculated in New York legal tender on the date of its maturity; and the effect of the statute is not to make the policy payable in the number of Canadian dollars specified by its terms instead of the equivalent in Canadian dollars of the number of American dollars so specified. Schon v. New York L. Ins. Co., 55 N. S. 137, 63 DomLR 475.

[c] Creditor's option as to place of payment as affecting medium.—(1) Railroads handling freight shipments between points in Canada and the United States, having the right to demand payment of charges either in advance or at the destination of the shipment, at a time when the rate of exchange of Canadian and American currency was fluctuating, could refuse prepayment of the charges upon a shipment from Canada to the United States and demand payment in the latter country, in which case it must be made in American money. Washburn-Crosby Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 16 F. (2d) 76, 50 ALR 1268. (2) Where a bond for the payment of a sum specified in dollars, made at a time when Canadian and American dollars were of equal value, was payable either in Montreal or in New York at the holder's option, the holder demanding payment in New York had the right to receive American dollars to the number called for by the bond, although at the time of such payment American dollars were worth more than Canadian dollars. Les Commissaires d'Ecole v. La Société des Artisans, 33 Que. K. B. 448.

[d] Mere fact that amount is specified in domestic money, in a contract payable in a foreign country, does not give rise to an agreement that payment should be made in the domestic currency, and the debtor must pay in money of such foreign country and not at his option in domestic money. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Cameron, 280 Pa. 458, 124 A 638, 33 ALR 1281.

[a] Bond payable in francs at Paris or in Belgium or Switzerland.—Where an American railway bond, the amount of which was specified in francs, was by its terms payable at Paris, or at the option of the holder in Belgium or Switzerland, the option of the holder to receive payment other than at Paris relates wholly to the place of payment, and does not affect the currency in which the bond is payable, the word "francs" being understood to refer to French money. Levy v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 210 App. Div. 422, 206 NYS 261.

[b] Construction of agreement as to medium of payment.—(1) In accordance with the rule that where the terms of a promise admit of more senses than one, the promise is to be performed in that sense in which the promisor apprehended it at the time the promisee received it, a bond in the French language calling for the payment of a specified amount in francs at Paris or at the option of the holder in Belgium or Switzerland must be construed to be payable in French currency and not in the franc of Belgium or Switzerland. Levy v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 210 App. Div. 422, 206 NYS 261. (2) When an obligation to pay a sum of money is contracted in one country, but is to be executed in another, and those countries have money of the same denomination but of different value, it will be presumed that the parties intended money of the country where the obligation is payable; and ac-particular medium operates as a payment, however, is determined by the law of the place where the transaction occurs.[73]

[§ 17] C. Particular Kinds of Money*[74]—1. In General. In the absence of any provision in the contract, or of any circumstances excluding it, contracts for the payment of money refer to the ordinary and usual currency in which business is transacted.[75] In such a case payment may be made in any legal tender.[76] A contract for the payment of a specified number of dollars will ordinarily be construed as payable only in lawful money of the United States,[77] unless otherwise provided by statute;[78] but where Confederate notes were current and constituted the principal currency at the time and place where the contract was made, it has been held that such currency should be deemed to have been referred to when dollars were mentioned, unless coin was specified.[79]

[§ 18] 2. Under Agreement—a. In General. If a particular kind of currency is contracted for, payment can be made only in that currency,[80] except where the creditor consents to payment in a different medium.[81] If the obligation is to pay in such funds as the banks receive and pay out at the maturity of the debt, it is payable in such medium, although the loan was of another kind of currency.[82] If the obligation is payable in a certain kind of coin, the fact that such coin afterward ceases to be a legal tender is immaterial,[83] unless the intention of the parties is that the debt be payable in legal tender, in which case the intention controls.[84]

Interest is payable in the same kind of money as the principal.[85]

[§ 19] b. Gold and Silver. It is now well settled, since a decision of the federal supreme court,[86]

cordingly a bond payable in dollars either at Montreal or at New York at the holder's option must be deemed payable in American dollars if the holder demands payment in New York. Les Commissaires d'Ecole v. La Société des Artisans, 33 Que. K. B. 448 (per Tellier, J.).

that a provision in a contract for payment in coin or a particular kind of coin is valid and enforceable,[87] and, although there is authority to the contrary,[88] this rule obtains, even though the contract was made after the passage of the legal tender acts of 1862.[89] The earlier decisions, however, generally held that payment could be made in any medium that was legal tender,[90] but this rule was not strictly applied in every case.[91]

Coin "or its equivalent." Where the agreement is to pay in coin or any particular coin "or its equivalent," it has been held that the payment must be made either in the particular coin or in other legal tender equal in value to such coin.[92] In other cases, however, the view has been taken that the contract is to pay a given number of dollars in any legal tender.[93]

[b] Rule applied to an award of the attorney-general against the United States. Tyers v. U. S., 5 Ct. Cl. 509.

[c] Mortgage stipulating for payment of the debt secured thereby in gold coin of the United States of the existing standard of weight and fineness is valid, and may be enforced in the courts without violating any principle of law or public policy, although legal tender notes and silver may be in circulation. Dorr v. Hunter, 183 Ill. 432, 56 NE 159; Rae v. Homestead Loan, etc., Co., 178 Ill. 369, 53 NE 220; Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, 41 NE 1097, 29 LRA 593.

[d] Implied agreements.—Since the legal tender acts, an undertaking to pay in gold may be implied under special circumstances and be as obligatory as if made in express words, but the implication must be found in the language of the contract, and cannot be gathered from the mere expectations of the parties. Maryland v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 105, 22 L. ed. 713 [foll Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 16 SCt 820, 40 L. ed. 973]. See also Gladstone v. Chamberlain, 10 F. Cas. No. 5,470, 7 Blatchf. 207 (agreement implied from the circumstances which led to the contract and under which it was made, and from the terms of the contract).

[e] Specie as equivalent to gold and silver.—A note expressed to be payable in specie is equivalent to a note expressed to be payable in gold or silver dollars, within the rule that such contract may be enforced by payment in coin. Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. ed. 460.

[f] Payment of dividends in gold.—Although an insurance company agrees to pay any loss in gold, it is not bound, in the absence of any provision to that effect, to pay dividends declared upon such policies in gold. Luling v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 207 [aff 50 Barb. 520 (rev 45 Barb. 510)].

[g] What constitutes agreement to pay in gold.—An obligation to pay "for value received in American gold" is not specifically payable in "American gold." Hull v. Kohlsaat, 36 Ill. 130.

term "legal tender" is not synonymous with "good and lawful money of the United States,"[96] and the fact that the treasury department would redeem a mutilated coin[97] or note[98] is not conclusive that it is legal tender.

[§ 21] b. Particular Kinds of Tender—(1) Domestic Money—(a) Gold Coins. Gold coins of the United States are legal tender in this country in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided by law for the single piece,[99] and when reduced in weight below such standard and tolerance are legal tender at a valuation proportionate to their actual weight.[1]

[§ 22] (b) Silver Coins—aa. In General. A silver dollar is legal tender for its nominal value on debts of any amount.[2] Fractional silver currency was formerly, under a federal statute,[3] legal tender to any amount,[4] but now it is a valid tender only for a limited sum.[5]

[§ 23] bb. Old, Worn, or Mutilated Coins. A genuine silver coin of the United States, even though it is old, somewhat rare, and differing in appearance from other coins of this government of like denomination, is legal tender.[6] Silver coins worn smooth by use but not appreciably diminished in weight, and still distinguishable, do not lose their character as legal tender.[7]

[§ 24] (c) Gold and Silver Certificates. Gold certificates of the United States are legal tender in this country,[8] but silver certificates are not.[9]

[§ 25] (d) Treasury and Legal Tender Notes. At an early day payment in paper money was sufficient, in the absence of any agreement as to the medium of payment,[10] and by the federal statutes of 1814 treasury notes were made legal tender to a very limited extent.[11] Subsequently, however, and before the passage of the legal tender acts of 1862, only gold or silver coin was legal tender in payment of private debts,[12] but since that time treasury notes, commonly called "greenbacks," are legal tender in payment of all debts,[13] even as to contracts entered into, or debts due, before the passage of such statute,[14] provided there was no stipulation in the con-

[a] Bank deposit.—The legal tender acts apply to ordinary bank deposits, so that a bank may pay in treasury notes, although the deposit was made in gold and before the passage of the legal tender statutes. Thompson v. Riggs, 6 D. C. 99.

[b] Reissuance of legal tender notes.—Under the federal statutes of 1878 providing that legal tender notes issued during the War of the Rebellion and since the close of the war redeemed and paid in gold coin at the treasury shall be reissued and kept in circulation, such notes, when so reissued, are legal tender. Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 4 SCt 122, 28 L. ed. 204.

[c] What constitutes debt within legal tender acts.—(1) "We think the term 'debt' employed in the [Legal Tender] Act of Congress is not limited to a demand, for which a personal liability exists against the party offering or making the payment, but that it comprehends, also, all liens, claims and charges upon property for the payment of money." O'Farrell, supra (dictum to same effect per Brosnan, J.; contrary dictum per Beatty, J.). (8) A claim for damages is not a debt within the federal legal tender acts so as to invalidate a state statute making a judgment a claim for damages payable in gold coin. Clark v. Nevada Land, etc., Co., 6 Nev. 203. (9) What constitutes debt generally see Debt 17 C. J. p 1371.

[a] Early contrary decisions.—(1) The first case on this point in the federal supreme court after the passage of the legal tender acts held that contracts for the payment of money made before the acts could not be discharged, unless by consent, otherwise than by tender of the sum due in coin. Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 19 L. ed. 513. (2) Shortly thereafter this decision was overruled by another in the same court. Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. ed. 287. (3) In the mean-tract to the contrary.[15] Such notes are also a legal standard of the value of property, or for the estimation of damages for breach of contracts.[16]

[§ 26] (2) Foreign Money. Foreign gold or silver coins are no longer legal tender for the payment of debts in the United States,[17] although formerly, under an act of congress,[18] they were.[19]

[§ 27] (3) Gold Dust. Gold dust is not legal tender;[20] nor is it cash within the meaning of a contract specifying that payment shall be made in cash.[21]

[§ 28] c. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. The constitutionality of the federal statutes of 1862 and the subsequent enactments making treasury notes legal tender, in addition to gold and silver, is well settled,[22] whether applied to debts contracted before or after the passage of the statute.[23]

State statutes cannot interfere with the federal constitution and statutes by authorizing as legal tender currency other than that provided for by the federal constitution and statutes,[24] but such an act requiring bank bills to be received in payment of judgments rendered in favor of banks,[25] or directing what shall be received as payment of a debt due a public corporation created for public purposes,[26] is not unconstitutional. A state statute providing that contracts for specific kinds of money may be enforced is constitutional,[27] while a state statute providing that such a provision is of no effect is unconstitutional.[28]

[§ 29] 4. Bank Paper[29]—a. In General. In the absence of a statute providing therefor, bank notes, while often considered as money in ordinary business transactions,[30] are not legal tender,[31] although one who accepts bank notes without objecting to them on that ground cannot thereafter raise the objection;[32] but payment in bank paper may be authorized by the terms of the contract,[33] or by statute or executive order.[34] Where the agreement is time, however, cases decided in state courts followed the doctrine of the Hepburn case. Chamblin v. Blair, 58 Ill. 385; Morrow v. Rainey, 58 Ill. 357; Walker v. Hesle, 1 Ky. Op. 331; McCallister v. Beattie, 1 Ky. Op. 7; Martin v. Martin, 20 N. J. Eq. 421; Ransford v. Marvin, 8, AbbPrNS (N. Y.) 432; Harrell v. Barnes, 34 Tex. 413. (4) But such decisions, it has been said, were rendered nugatory when the Hepburn case on which they were based was overruled. Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, 41 NE 1097, 29 LRA 593.

[a] Statute held unconstitutional.—Act Sept. 30, 1920 (Ala. Acts [1920] p 36), providing that, when a check is presented or forwarded to the payee bank for payment through another bank or agency, it may at its option pay or remit the same in money or in exchange drawn on its reserve agent, is unconstitutional and void as an attempt by the state to make a class of debts payable at the option of the debtor in something other than gold or silver coin. [b] Measure of damages for failure to pay.—Where a shipping contract provided that the carrier's compensation should be paid in notes of a certain banking company, payment to be made at a certain time and place, the measure of damages for the shipper's breach of the contract was the specie value of the notes at the place of payment at the time they should have been paid. Robinson v. Noble, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 181, 8 L. ed. 910.

to pay in current bank notes, it means such as are current without discount in ordinary business at the time the debt becomes due.[35] If the creditor consents to receive certain bank paper as payment the debt is satisfied,[36] but consent will not be implied from mere delay in returning rejected bank notes where the creditor immediately notified the debtor of his refusal to accept them.[37] Payment made in bank bills and accepted is a good payment at their nominal par value.[38]

[§ 30] b. Validity of Paper and Failure of Bank. A debtor paying in bank notes impliedly warrants that they are current and will pass readily in mercantile and business transactions as money.[39] Accordingly, it has been held in some jurisdictions that payment in the bills of a bank which has failed is insufficient,[40] although neither the debtor nor the creditor knew of the failure.[41] Other courts, however, hold such a payment sufficient,[42] and in these jurisdictions it cannot be avoided by presentment of the note to the issuing bank and demand for payment with notice to the payor of the bank's refusal to pay.[43] Where such payment is held insufficient, the bills received must be returned within a reasonable time after the creditor discovers that they are valueless, to enable him to recover upon the original debt.[44] If, however, the payor, upon being seasonably notified of the failure of the bank, refuses to accept the bills, a delay in returning them is excusable.[45]

Antecedent and contemporaneous debts. As in the case of commercial paper,[46] a distinction has been made by some courts between bank notes given in payment of antecedent debts and those given in payment of contemporaneous debts.[47] In the latter circumstances, it has been said, the notes operate as payment, and the risk of the solvency of the maker of the note is on the receiver,[48] whereas in the former case they are not payment, and the risk is upon the person paying.[49] The applicability of this rule to bank paper has, however, been denied.[50]

[§ 31] 5. Counterfeit Money. There is an implied warranty that money paid is genuine,[51] and an attempted payment in counterfeit money is a nullity,[52] even though the person paying was ignorant of the fact that it was counterfeit.[53] Unless he has a sufficient excuse, however,[54] it is generally held that a creditor who does not, within a reasonable time after he discovers the money is counterfeit, return[55] or offer to return[56] it will be concluded by the payment, where the parties acted in good faith,[57] what shall be considered a reasonable time depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case.[58] There is authority, however, to the effect that it is not necessary to return such money.[59]

[a] Counterfeit foreign money.—If a contract is payable "in foreign bills," a delivery of a counterfeit foreign bill is no payment, and although the contract is then surrendered to the debtor, the creditor may still re-

Negligence. If a bank receives counterfeits of its own notes in payment, it must bear the loss where the debtor acted innocently in making the payment.[60]

Agreement to take specific money. Where goods are delivered under an agreement to take a specific parcel of coin in payment, a delivery of such coin will be a good bar to an action for the value of the goods, although in fact it was counterfeit money.[61]

[§ 32] 6. Confederate Money[62]—a. In General. Confederate money was not legal currency[63] and could not be made so by military orders.[64] Accordingly, a creditor could not be compelled to accept payment in Confederate notes,[65] unless the contract expressly[66] or impliedly[67] provided therefor. However, if Confederate money was accepted in good faith, at a time and place where it was current, it was generally held that the debt was thereby discharged,[68] although in a few cases it was said that

[a] Discussion of rule.—"The doctrine . . . will have no application where the person passing the money knew or had reason to know that it was counterfeit; for in such case such person would be liable both criminally and civilly, without regard to the question of diligence on the part of the person receiving the same." [a] Discussion of rule.—"No certain time can be fixed, when notice of dishonor must be given to the debtor. It can hardly be pretended that it is sufficient to make the duty absolute, because the bill has been thrown out by a single bank; and especially when, as in the case at bar, it was merely doubted and declined. The duty of returning the bill must begin, if at all, from the time that the holder has what the jury shall deem satisfactory evidence that it is spurious. If the rule is to be admitted at all, it cannot with propriety be extended to doubtful cases, where there is no evidence of bad faith on the part of the plaintiff." Burrill v. [d] Burden of showing use of reasonable means to discover counterfeit.—In an action to recover the value of two hundred and ninety-nine thousand "Carrancistas Constitutional Mexican Currency," which was alleged to have been guaranteed by defendant to be genuine, but which was alleged to be spurious, false, and counterfeit, it was incumbent on plaintiff to show that he had used reasonable means to ascertain whether or not the money was genuine. [a] Reason for rule.—"The return of the counterfeit note to the defendant is not essential to the maintenance of this action. It is entirely worthless, and an offer to return it would be an idle ceremony, which the law never requires." Kent v. Bornstein, 12 Allen (Mass.) 342, 344.

[a] Conditional acceptance.—Where a Confederate bond was transferred in payment of a debt and the debtor promised that if the manner of the transfer was not correct and valid he would make it so, or would pay the money, and the transfer was in fact invalid, the duty of ascertain-such payment was not valid.[69]

Duress. Where the acceptance of payment in Confederate money was under duress exercised by the debtor, or through compulsion used by the military authorities, the payment was invalid,[70] but nothing short of duress in its legal sense invalidated such payment.[71] Before a creditor who had accepted such payment under duress could recover the debt in authorized currency, he was required to tender back the identical money received by him.[72]

Payment after close of war. A payment in Confederate money after the surrender of the Confederate army has been held invalid,[73] at least where the debtor knew of the surrender and induced an acceptance of payment by false statements;[74] but such a payment was held good where both parties were ignorant of the surrender.[75]

Recovery after Civil War on contracts made during war. In actions after the war upon contracts made within the Confederate states during the war, to pay a certain sum in dollars, without specifying the kind of currency in which it was to be paid, where it was shown by the nature of the transaction and the attendant circumstances or by the language of the contract itself to have contemplated payment in Confederate currency, it was held that no more could be recovered than the value of that currency in lawful money of the United States,[76] and statutes fixing the amount of recovery at the value of the property sold instead of the value of the Confederate notes in lawful money, were held to be unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts in that they deprived the buyer or seller of ing the defect and remedying it was upon the debtor, so that if he failed so to do he became absolutely liable to pay the amount in money without any notice of the defect from the other party. Bryan v. Heck, 67 N. C. 322.

[b] Mere unwillingness to receive Confederate currency in payment of a debt will not, if the currency was actually received in payment, be enough to invalidate the acceptance of the currency. The unwillingness necessary to invalidate the payment must be of the degree and character authorizing the courts to treat the acceptance and payment as void or voidable, upon the principles applicable to payments not tainted with Confederate currency. Jones v. Thomas, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 465.

[c] Who may object.—A vendor, seeking to enforce his lien on the land against a subpurchaser, who claims as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, cannot question the validity of the payment by such subpurchaser because made in Confederate currency. Kinsey v. Howard, 47 Ala. 236.

[d] Payment to an administrator, in Confederate treasury notes, of a debt due the estate relieves the debtor of liability. Hendry v. Cline, 29 Ark. 414; Hyatt v. McBurney, 18 S. C. 199 [rev on other grounds 118 U. S. 279, 30 L. ed. 168].

[e] Payment to agents held valid payment. Sands v. New York L. Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 626, 10 AmR 535; Robinson v. London International L. Assur. Soc., 42 N. Y. 54, 1 AmR 400; Maloney v. Stephens, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 738.

[f] Payment to guardian discharges the debt. Baughn v. Shackleford, 48 Miss. 255.

[g] Payment to officer.—(1) It has been said that, while no inflexible rule could be laid down, a collecting officer without instructions to the contrary might have received Confederate treasury notes up to 1863, and ought not to have received them after 1863, and that 1863 is debatable ground. Emerson v. Mallett, 62 N. C. 234. (2) So it was held in some cases that an officer had power to accept payment of a judgment or a bid at a judicial sale in Confederate money where it was the chief circulating medium. Black v. Rose, 14 S. C. 274; Binford v. Memphis Bulletin Co., 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 355; Douglas v. Neil, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 437; Coleman v. Wingfield, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 133; Henly v. Franklin, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 472, 91 AmD 296. (3) But the contrary was held in other cases. See cases infra note 69. (4) Such payment is invalid where the beneficiary had expressly refused to accept Confederate money. Blackwell v. Tucker, 7 S. C. 387. (5) If the repayment of a loan of a deposit in court, in Confederate money, was pursuant to an order of the court permitting such payment, it was valid. Taylor v. Lancaster, 33 Gratt. (74 Va.) 1.

[h] Payment to trustee in Confederate money, if made and accepted in good faith, discharges the debtor. Howard College v. Turner, 71 Ala. 429, 46 AmR 326; King v. King, 37 Ga. 205; Mayer v. Mordecai, 1 S. C. 383, 7 AmR 26.

71. Fogg v. Union Bank, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 530; Rollings v. Cate, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 97; and cases infra this note.

[a] Conduct not constituting duress.—(1) Mere statements that the creditor dared not refuse to accept payment in Confederate money, that he would be liable therefor, and considered disloyal and put in prison until the end of the war, where the debtor had no power to imprison the creditor and did not threaten to do so, do not constitute duress. Simmons v. Trumbo, 9 W. Va. 358 [overr Mann v. Lewis, 3 W. Va. 215, 100 AmD 747; Mann v. McVey, 3 W. Va. 232]. (2) A mere statement of the debtor to an unwilling creditor that he "must" take Confederate money, unaccompanied by any force, threat of force, or reference to compulsion was held not to be duress, even though part of the Confederate army was in the town in which payment was made and military order required acceptance of such money in payment of debts and arrest of persons for refusal to accept it, and even though some persons had been arrested therefor. Davis v. Mississippi Cent. R. Co., 46 Miss. 552. (3) Persistence of the debtor unaccompanied by threats is not duress although the community was in intense state of excitement over a rumored military order requiring acceptance of payment in Confederate money, which order was being enforced by a vigilance committee. Fogg v. Union Bank, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 530. (4) Vague and undefined fears of violence from nobody in particular, but from everybody in general, at some uncertain period, without some contemporaneous demonstration of violence, is not the duress contemplated by law. Van der Hoven v. Nette, 32 Tex. 183.

[b] Acceptance not under duress.—(1) Taking Confederate money under some general or indefinite apprehension that failure to recognize the currency would give offense to the government or any of its officers is not acting under duress. Rollings v. Cate, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 97. (2) Taking Confederate money in the absence of threats or protests, even though martial law prevailed and a military order rendered the receipt of such money compulsory, is not accepting it under duress. Glenn v. Case, 25 Ark. 616, 620.

[c] Acceptance under duress.—(1) Where, in payment of a note due before the War of the Rebellion, a person received Confederate notes at par under the influence of an association employing unlawful and coercive means to force men by fear of personal punishment to comply with its will, it was held that he received them under duress. Jones v. Rogers, 36 Ga. 157. (2) Where defendant threatened to report plaintiff to a newspaper for refusing to receive Confederate money in payment of a debt, and plaintiff was arrested by military authorities for refusal in another case and confined while sick in jail until he consented to receive such money, his consent to do so was extorted, and it was immaterial whether or not defendant knew of the duress. Emerson v. Lee, 18 La. Ann. 134, 89 AmD 648.

the value of his contract.[77]

Scaling acts. Statutes commonly known as "scaling acts," passed in many of the southern states, expressly providing a scale of recovery upon contracts entered into during the war for payment upon the basis of Confederate money, governed the amount of recovery upon such contracts.[78] These statutes were not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.[79] They did not apply to specie debts,[80] to contracts made before the war,[81] or to notes given during the war in renewal of,[82] or in substitution for,[83] others made before the war. It has been held that a note given after the war in renewal of one made during the war was a new contract and not subject to the scale,[84] but this was denied where there was no scaling of the old note at the time of renewal.[85]

[§ 33] b. Validity of Contracts.[86] Although in a number of early cases, contracts performable in, or based upon, Confederate money were held to be illegal as against public policy,[87] this doctrine was amount of recovery depends upon the current rate of exchange, and not the par value of the particular moneys involved.[98]

Distinction as to place of payment. A distinction is made, in some cases, between an obligation to pay foreign money in this country and an obligation to pay foreign money in a foreign country.[99] It is the rule of these cases that, if an obligation is payable in foreign money in a foreign country, and suit is brought thereon in this country, the value of the foreign money is reckoned as of the date of trial or judgment;[1] while if the obligation is payable in this country, the value of such money is reckoned as of the date it became payable.[2] Other cases apparently ignore this distinction and, without inquiring as to the place of payment, hold simply that, where foreign money is the object of the suit, the value is fixed according to the rate of exchange at the time of judgment.[3] Similarly, in determining the value of a debt expressed in foreign money, not being damages for breach of contract and not payable at a fixed time or place, the judgment-day rule has been applied.[4]

Distinction as to form of action. Although the validity of such distinction has been denied,[5] actions on a contract to recover a sum of money admitted to be due and actions for damages for breach of contract have been distinguished by some courts.[6]

[a] Reasons for, and discussion of, rule.—(1) "In this case, unlike Hicks v. Guinness, 269 U. S. 71, 46 SCt 46, 70 L. ed. 168, at the date of the demand the German Bank owed no duty to the plaintiff under our law. It was not subject to our jurisdiction and the only liability that it incurred by its failure to pay was that which the German law might impose. It has incurred no additional or other one since. . . . It was and continued to be a liability in marks alone and was open to satisfaction by the payment of that number of marks, at any time, with whatever interest might have accrued, however much the mark might have fallen in value as compared with other things." Die Deutsche Bank Filiale Nurnberg v. Humphrey, 272 U. S. 517, 518, 47 SCt 166, 71 L. ed. 383. (2) "The distinction between the Deutsche Bank case [47 SCt 166] and Hicks v. Guinness, 269 U. S. 71, 46 SCt 46, 70 L. ed. 168, is not, as argued, that the plaintiff in Hicks v. Guinness was in the United States, but that, as the Court understood the facts, the debt was payable in New York and subject to American law, so that upon a breach of the contract there arose a present liability in dollars." Zimmermann v. Sutherland, 274 U. S. 253, 255, 47 SCt 625, 71 L. ed. 1034.

[b] For example (1) the debt of a German bank to an American citizen, arising from refusal to pay deposit on demand, will be determined as of the value of the mark at the time of suit and not according to the rate of exchange existing when the demand was made. Die Deutsche Bank Filiale Nurnberg v. Humphrey, 272 U. S. 517, 47 SCt 166, 71 L. ed. 383 [rev 7 F. (2d) 330]. (2) Where libelant made advances in France in francs to the master of respondent's vessel, and brought suit to recover for such advances in the United States, the amount being payable in France, in French money, libelant was entitled to a decree for such sum in dollars as would purchase the requisite number of francs at the rate of exchange prevailing at the date of the decree. The Hurona, 268 Fed. 910. (3) A shipper is entitled to recover the stated amount of Italian lire, for duplicate freight paid, at the exchange rate existing when the decree was entered. S. 517, 47 SCt 166, 71 L. ed. 383, as holding, in a case involving settlement of accounts of a German partnership having one member in America, that the partnership contract might be regarded as subjecting the German partners to American law and warranting a settlement as of the date when it first became legal after the war, taking the mark at its value at that time].

[a] Reasons for, and discussion of, rule.—(1) "The debt was due to an American creditor and was to be paid in the United States. When the contract was broken by a failure to pay, the American firm had a claim here, not for the debt, but, at its option, for damages in dollars. It no longer could be compelled to accept marks. It had a right to say to the debtors 'You are too late to perform what you have promised, and we want the dollars to which we have a right by the law here in force.'" Hicks v. Guinness, 269 U. S. 71, 80, 46 SCt 46, 70 L. ed. 168. (2) "The libelant . . . was entitled to the payment in New York on January 1, 1916, of the number of dollars represented by £8,269. We are not seeking the equivalent of £8,269 in dollars, in order to replace that number of pounds in England, but are ascertaining what was the damage on January 1, 1916, in dollars represented by £8,269. That can only be calculated at $4.74 for each pound sterling, the then rate of exchange." In re Verdi, 268 Fed. 908, 909.

[b] Illustrations.—(1) An indebtedness by a German subject to an American citizen on an account stated before declaration of war between Germany and the United States, payable in marks, on recovery in a court of the United States, is measured by the value of the marks in American money at the time the account was stated, and the right to indemnity for its nonpayment accrued, rather than at the time of recovery. Hicks v. Guinness, 269 U. S. 71, 46 SCt 46, 70 L. ed. 168 [rev on other grounds 299 Fed. 538 (aff 291 Fed. 769)]. (2) Where a collision between two British vessels occurred in New York Harbor, and suit therefor was brought in that district, but repairs were made in England and paid for in English pounds, and demurrage was also computed by agreement in that money, in reducing such sums to American money for the purposes of the decree, the rate of exchange applicable was held to be the current rate at the time the damages became payable, as fixed by the decree. In re Verdi, 268 Fed. 908. (3) Where a contract was made in this country to pay in Mexican dollars, it was held that the value of the Mexican money may be allowed at its value in our money at the time the debt was due instead of its value at the time of the trial. [a] Discussion of rule.—"We think that in the interest of uniformity, the breach-day rule should be followed in the absence of clear proof of exceptional conditions. We do not regard as exceptional the fact that the claim here asserted is for a debt due under a contract and not for damages for a breach thereof. . . . To differentiate between a debt and a claim for damages is to lose sight of the economic fact that foreign currency is a commodity. In the contemplation of the parties the promisee who is entitled to receive pounds sterling is entitled to the purchasing power of the pound sterling on that date. The breach-day rule gives him compensation measured by the purchasing power of the foreign currency on the day he was entitled to receive it." Kantor v. Aristo Hosiery Co., 222 App. Div. 502, 503, 226 NYS 582 [aff 248 N. Y. 630 mem, 162 NE 553 mem].

6. Matter of King, 129 Misc. 244,

In the former class of actions, it has been held that the debt must be paid in domestic money at the rate of exchange prevailing at the time of the decision,[7] whereas in actions for the recovery of damages for breach of contract or a tort the measure of damages is fixed by the value of the money at the time and place the action accrued.[8] In England the breach-day rule is applied to actions on a debt,[9] as well as to actions for damages for breach of contract[10] or a tort,[11] and this rule has been approved in some American cases.[12] In an action to administer trust funds the rate of exchange has been applied as of the date on which the amount due was finally ascertained.[13]

If there is no current exchange damages must be given according to the rate of exchange at par[14]

[§ 36] 8. Depreciated Currency. Although there is some authority to the contrary,[15] as a general rule payment cannot be made in depreciated currency or

[a] Reasons for, and discussion of, rule.—(1) "This was a French contract for the sale in France of French goods for which the purchaser agreed to pay in French francs at Paris, France. At any time before suit was brought the defendant could have tendered the plaintiff at Paris, France, the 10,450 francs in full payment of her claim, and plaintiff would have been compelled to accept the same. . . . By merely bringing action in this jurisdiction, the plaintiff, I apprehend, acquired no right to a more favorable judgment than she could have obtained had action been brought in France." Sirie v. Godfrey, 196 App. Div. 529, 536, 188 NYS 52. (2) "If the plaintiff had sued in France, it clearly would only be entitled to a judgment for an amount of francs, and the plaintiff by suing in another country cannot obtain the advantage of adopting a rate of exchange at a time other than the date of the rendition of the judgment. The plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for francs in accordance with its bills rendered and its demand for payment. The only reason for translating the amount of francs into dollars is because the judgment must be rendered in the money of the forum; hence the date of the application of the rate of exchange should be the time of the rendition of the judgment." Metcalf Co. v. Mayer, 213 App. Div. 607, 613, 211 NYS 53.

"In an action properly brought in the courts of this state by a citizen or an alien to recover damages, liquidated or unliquidated, for breach of contract or for a tort, where primarily the plaintiff is entitled to recover a sum expressed in foreign money, in determining the amount of the judgment expressed in our currency the rate of exchange prevailing at the date of the breach of contract or at the date of the commission of the tort is under ordinary circumstances to be applied." Hoppe v. Russo-Asiatic Bank, 235 N. Y. 37, 39, 138 NE 497.

[a] Reasons for, and discussion of, rule.—(1) "If a man contracts to deliver wheat on a given day, and fails to do so, the measure of damages is the market price of the article on that day and in principle it is difficult to see why the rule should not hold good when he agrees to deliver Mexican dollars, or other foreign money, which, in the absence of some positive law of our own, is but a commodity." Grunwald v. Freese, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 182, 187, 34 P 73. (2) "To take any other date than that of the breach as that at which the conversion is to be made will lead to intentional obstruction of speedy trials or make the rights of the parties dependent upon all sorts of accidental occurrences." Payment made in currency under a contract to pay a certain sum in specie discharges the contract to the amount of the specie value at the date thereof.[20]

[§ 37] 9. Appreciated Currency. Where a debt is payable in current funds, the creditor cannot claim the right to be paid in an appreciated medium of payment, such as gold.[21] Under a contract to pay at a future date in the currency then in circulation an amount equivalent to the amount of the debt as it was valued at the date of the contract, the debtor has the benefit of the appreciation of gold up to the expiration of the credit but not of that which occurs after default in payment.[22] Where, after the debt is created, but before it becomes due, the value of a dollar in currency becomes appreciated, the creditor is entitled to receive payment in current money at its value when the debt falls due.[23]

[§ 38] 10. Uncurrent or Unlawful Money. By the agreement or consent of the parties payment may be made in uncurrent money or notes,[24] or even in unlawful money;[25] but in the absence of agreement or consent a creditor cannot be compelled to accept payment in such money.[26] in money actually results from the medium transferred or delivered to the creditor, the debt is extinguished to the extent of such payment.[30] Ordinarily, an agreement for payment other than in money is presumed to be made in favor of the debtor,[31] and he has the option of paying the debt either in the medium specified or in money of equal value;[32] but after the time for payment has passed the debt is payable only in money, in the absence of the creditor's consent to receive something else.[33]

Debtor must effectuate transfer or assignment. Where it is agreed that payment may be made by the assignment or transfer of property other than money, the debtor must do what is necessary to transfer such interest in the property as to enable the creditor to obtain the beneficial ownership thereof,[34] and if he fails to do so he remains liable on the debt.[35]

Where a worthless thing is received without knowledge of its worthlessness or invalidity, no payment is effectuated,[36] although the creditor may be estopped by delay in notifying the debtor of the de-

[e] Vendee's equity forfeited to the vendor.—Where one who had contracted to purchase property transferred his equity therein to his creditor in satisfaction of a debt, the creditor assuming no obligation under the contract and the debtor agreeing to complete the payments thereon, and thereafter the debtor defaulted in payment of the purchase price and the contract was canceled by the vendor, whereby the interests of the debtor and the creditor therein were forfeited, no payment was effectuated. Spear v. Ryan, 64 Mont. 145, 208 P 1069.

[f] Creditor not bound to obtain draft from third person.—Where a creditor agreed to accept, in payment of the debt due him, a draft of a third person, and such third person failed to give the draft, the effect of such failure must fall upon the debtor, who was bound to procure the draft, and not on the creditor, who was only bound to receive it, and consequently no payment is effectuated. Watkins v. James, 48 N. C. 195.

Delivery as element of payment in general see supra § 1.

35. Weeks v. Elliott, 33 Me. 488; and cases supra note 34.

36. See cases infra this note.

[a] Bonds of which consideration fails.—Bonds of third persons, assigned to the creditor to be applied to the discharge of the debt, cannot be considered as payment, although they are not returned to the assignor, where the consideration of the bonds has failed, and they are of no value. Wilson v. Hurst, 30 F. Cas. No. 17,809, Pet C. C. 441.

[b] Certificate of deposit in insolvent bank.—(1) Where the officers of a trust company issued a certificate of deposit, in payment of a debt, at a time when the trust company was hopelessly insolvent, the certificate did not constitute payment, whether or not the trust company's officers knew of the insolvency. Reserve Loan L. Ins. Co. v. Dulin, 69 Ind. A. 363, 122 NE 3. (2) Certificates of deposit or indebtedness as payment see infra § 54.

[c] Certificates of discharge from army valueless when assigned.—Where payment was agreed to be made partly in cash and partly in certificates of honorable discharge from the army, and under the laws of the United States such certificates were valueless in the hands of an assignee, the vendor of the land was entitled to recover the balance of the price in money. Taft v. Wildman, 15 Oh. 123.

[d] Mortgage which has been paid.—(1) Where a creditor received as payment an assignment of a mort-

fect.[37]

[§ 40] 2. Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes[38]—a. In General. The rule obtaining in most jurisdictions is that, in the absence of agreement or consent to receive it as such,[39] a draft or bill of exchange,[40] although accepted by the gage which has theretofore been paid and satisfied by the mortgagor, such assignment, although accompanied by no guaranty, is no payment and furnishes no defense to an action on the original debt. Hamilton v. Neel, 7 Watts (Pa.) 517. (2) Payment by assignment of claim against third person see infra § 57.

[e] Order upon nonexistent drawee or friend.—(1) Where a manufacturer, after securing promises that citizens of the community would contribute a specified sum toward the construction of a factory, contracts for its erection and agrees to pay part of the cost by an order upon the "citizens committee" for the amount promised to be contributed therefor, such order did not effectuate a payment of the contract price when no such committee was in fact organized or existing and no funds were raised or contributed in fulfillment of such promises. J. Weller Co. v. Gordon, 24 Oh. Cir. Ct. 407. See also Hussey v. Sibley, 66 Me. 192, 22 AmR 557 (holding that an order delivered and received in ignorance of its worthlessness was not payment, but not stating the reason for its want of value). (2) Order upon third person as payment see infra § 56.

[f] Town warrant in excess of debt limit.—(1) Where plaintiffs, who furnished materials to a school contractor, agreed to accept a valid town warrant, and accepted a warrant which was illegal because in excess of the debt limit, without knowledge of such illegality, there was no payment. Everly v. Ball, 60 Ind. A. 7, 108 NE 543. (2) Payment by delivery of municipal warrants see infra § 55.

[g] Void certificate of indebtedness.—(1) Where certificates of indebtedness of county commissioners were received, by agreement, in payment of a contract price for drainage work, both parties believing the certificates to be valid, but they were not paid and the assessment for the cost of such construction was uncollectable because of a defect in prior proceedings, the certificates did not constitute a payment and the creditor was entitled to recover the contract price. Catlin v. Munn, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 23. (2) Certificates of indebtedness as payment see infra § 54.

[h] Worthless or invalid check.—(1) A debtor is not discharged by giving to his creditor a check upon a bank where he has neither funds nor credit, or by indorsing a check drawn by a third party, who has no funds subject to its payment, even though such check is given and received under the agreement that it shall be payment. Citizens Bank v. Kretschmar, 91 Miss. 608, 44 S 930; Fleig v. Sleet, 43 Oh. St. 53, 1 NE 24, 54 AmR 800; Kegley v. Skillman, 68 Wash. 637, 123 P 1081. (2) So a check does not constitute payment where drawn in the absence of funds and with no reasonable expectation of funds in the hands of the drawees to meet it, and no reasonable expectation that it would be honored. Holmes v. Fall River First Nat. Bank, 126 Mass. 353; Taylor v. Wilson, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 44, 45 AmD 180; Fleig v. Sleet, 43 Oh. St. 53, 1 NE 24, 54 AmR 800. (3) A check drawn upon a bank which is insolvent and whose affairs are in liquidation is not payment. Bieringer-Hanauer Co. v. Cosmopolitan Trust Co., 247 Mass. 73, 141 NE 566; Cosmopolitan Trust Co. v. Lyons, 244 Mass. 115, 138 NE 325. (4) The delivery of a check, on which the place where it is drawn is not stated, as required by statute, and which is not stamped, does not amount to a payment. Bond v. Warden, 1 Coll. 583, 28 EngCh 583, 63 Reprint 553. (5) Payment by check see infra §§ 50–53

37. State v. Abramson, 57 Ark. 142, 20 SW 1084.

[a] Forged warrant.—Where county warrants given and received in payment of an obligation to the state were afterward discovered to be forgeries, but the state did not notify the debtor thereof for nearly three years, its right to recover on the original obligation is lost, inasmuch as it should have given notice within a reasonable time to afford the debtor an opportunity to enforce his right of redress, if any, against the person who passed the forged paper to him. State v. Abramson, 57 Ark. 142, 20 SW 1084.

[a] "The reason assigned for this departure from the principles of the common law is, that the debtor might otherwise be put to inconvenience, and possibly be compelled to pay the debt twice, as he could not successfully defend himself against an action on the note in the hands of an innocent indorsee, by showing that the debt, for which it was given, had been otherwise satisfied. The law, therefore, raises a presumption against the creditor, who has taken such security, that he has renounced his right of action on the original contract. This, however, is only a presumption, which may be overcome by proof to the contrary; but the burden of proving this is thrown on the creditor." The Betsy and Rhoda, 3 F. Cas. No. 1,366, 2 Ware 117, 120.

setts,[50] and Vermont,[51] the rule has frequently been stated that the execution and delivery by a debtor to his creditor of a negotiable bill of exchange or promissory note constitutes payment of a preëxisting debt, except where it appears, either by express agreement or from the circumstances of the transaction, that it was not the intention of the parties that it should be received as such,[52] or where the transaction was fraudulent or made under a misapprehension of the facts;[53] but it would seem that such supposed rule is only another way of stating the rebuttable presumption, existing in those jurisdictions, that such a bill or note is intended by the parties to be delivered and received as payment,[54] as it has been expressly held that if the paper proves unproductive the creditor may sue upon the original demand.[55] A bill or note not governed by the law merchant, however, is not a payment in the absence of agreement or consent to receive it as such,[56] no such presumption applying to it.[57]

Lyman, 36 Vt. 733 (where a creditor agreed to accept as payment an order for goods, and instead the debtor sent him a promissory note, which he refused to receive when he was unable to obtain goods thereon, and returned it to the debtor, it was held that no payment was effectuated by the note).

[a] Crediting a note upon the creditor's books does not of itself constitute it a payment where such note was neither given nor received in payment, but to raise money. Follett v. Steele, 16 Vt. 30.

[b] What constitutes nonacceptance.—Where the debtor sent the creditor several drafts in payment, and the latter collected one and returned the others for a certain indorsement, which the debtor refused to make, there is no acceptance by the creditor enabling him to recover on the drafts instead of the original indebtedness. and delivered by a debtor to his creditor constitutes a payment, and discharges the debt when it is so agreed or when the creditor consents to receive it as such, whether or not such bill or note is afterward paid,[61] except when the agreement is conditional and the condition fails.[62] While it has frequently been said obiter that an express agreement is necessary,[63] the rule established by the decisions is that an implied agreement is sufficient;[64] but the implication must be clear,[65] in view of the presumption obtaining in most jurisdictions that a bill or note is accepted only as additional security.[66]

A mere attempt to collect or enforce a bill or note from which no payment results is not such an appropriation of it as to discharge the debt.[67]

[§ 42] c. Transfer by Creditor. While the mere transfer by a creditor to a third person of a bill or note not received as payment does not extinguish the debt,[68] so long as such bill or note is outstanding in the hands of a third person it will be treated as having been accepted in discharge of the debt so as to bar action thereon.[69]

[a] Not merely prima facie evidence of payment.—(1) While a note is presumed in Vermont to be received as payment, and so prima facie is payment, if an agreement to receive it as payment is shown, the note is payment, and so it is error in such case to instruct only that it is prima facie payment. Belknap v. Billings, 78 Vt. 214, 62 A 56. (2) Presumption of acceptance as payment see infra § 216. (3) Vermont rule as to bill or note as payment see supra § 40 text and note 51.

But see White v. Panama Lumber, etc., Co., 136 Wash. 554, 559, 240 P 913 (where the court said: "Another error is claimed in that the court instructed the jury, '. . . that it is not necessary that an express agreement to accept a note in payment of an obligation be proved but it is sufficient if it be shown that there was an understanding to that effect.' This instruction misstates the law, for the reason that, where a promissory note is given for a debt then in existence, the debt is not thereby extinguished, unless it was expressly agreed that an extinction should take place. This instruction is exactly contrary to the rule thus stated, and therefore was error").

"While the books, including at least two of our own precedents, frequently speak of the rule as requiring the parties to 'expressly' agree, nevertheless as stated in 30 Cyc. 1201, whenever the question has been specifically considered the decision has been that the parties 'agreed,' if it is shown that they agreed in terms or that they understood that the acceptance of a note extinguished an antecedent debt. The agreement need not be expressed in terms; but it is sufficient if it appears from all the facts and circumstances that the parties intended and understood that the note should be received in absolute payment of the antecedent debt." Riner v. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co., supra.

[a] Attending circumstances and subsequent acts.—The implication that a bill or note is accepted as payment may arise from the attending circumstances, and the subsequent conduct of the creditor may be looked to in arriving at a conclusion in respect of it. [b] Acceptance of note from drawee of draft.—(1) Where a creditor received from his debtor a draft or bill of exchange, and upon presentment to the drawee accepted the note of the latter for the amount thereof, the creditor must be deemed to have accepted the draft in payment, and the debtor is discharged. Elm City Lumber Co. v. Mackenzie, 77 Conn. 1, 58 A 10; Southwick v. Sax, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 122. (2) Acceptance of third person as debtor see infra §§ 56–58.

[c] Alteration of draft by creditor.—Where the creditor makes a draft his own by altering it so as to vitiate it, it constitutes a payment. Alderson v. Langdale, 3 B. & Ad. 660, 23 ECL 291, 110 Reprint 241.

[d] Foreclosure of accompanying mortgage.—(1) Where the seller of a motion picture theater, who took notes for the purchase price, secured by a chattel mortgage on the equipment, foreclosed the mortgage, he cannot be heard to say that he did not accept the notes in full payment of the purchase price. Harmon v. Dickerson, (Mo. A.) 184 SW 139. (2) Application of collateral security as payment see infra § 60.

[e] Giving of receipt and acquiescence.—(1) A note may properly be regarded as received in payment of a debt when a receipt is given which treats it in the same way as money received at the same time, and no attempt is made to treat it otherwise for several years. Mosley v. Floyd, 31 Ga. 564. (2) Operation and conclusiveness of receipt for payment by bill or note see infra § 82.

[f] Laches by not presenting a draft for payment when due may make it the creditor's own and operate as a satisfaction of the original indebtedness. Alderson v. Langdale, 3 B. & Ad. 660, 23 ECL 291, 110 Reprint 241.

[§ 43] d. Effect of Invalidity or Fraud.[70] No payment is effectuated by the delivery by a debtor to his creditor of a bill or note which is invalid or unenforceable,[71] as where it is defective in form[72] or usurious;[73] nor is the debt discharged where the creditor's consent to receive the bill or note is procured by fraud or misrepresentation,[74] unless such fraud is waived.[75]

[§ 44] e. Application of Rules[76]—(1) Bill or Note of One or More Codebtors. In accordance with the rules above stated,[77] a bill or note executed by one or more but less than the whole number of joint debtors is not a payment of a preëxisting indebtedness so as to discharge the other debtors,[78] even in those jurisdictions where a negotiable bill or note of a debtor is ordinarily regarded as payment,[79] except where the creditor agrees or consents to receive it in satisfaction of the debt.[80] And separate notes of each of two or more persons jointly indebted, for their respective shares of the debt, do not discharge the joint obligation, in the absence of the creditor's agreement or consent thereto,[81] although, by extending the time of payment of the share of one,[82] the note may operate to extinguish the liability of the others, considered as sureties, for such share.[83]

[§ 45] (2) Bill or Note of Agent for Principal's Debt.[84] In accordance with the general rules above stated,[85] it is held in most jurisdictions that a draft[86] or promissory note[87] of an agent executed for the debt of his principal does not discharge the

[a] Invalidity as to some of makers.—(1) Where a note is invalid as to some of the parties who appear to have joined in making it because the debtor who made it was not authorized to bind them, it is not a payment. Lee v. Fontaine, 10 Ala. 755, 44 AmD 505. (2) And where a joint note is executed for a debt and at its maturity a new note is given for the unpaid balance, which is invalid as to one of the makers on account of a material alteration, a recovery can be had against the maker as to whom it is invalid upon the original cause of action if the old note is produced at the trial. debt, except when the creditor agrees or consents to receive it as payment thereof,[88] although, on principles of estoppel,[89] if the creditor, by giving a receipt as for money, or otherwise, induces the principal debtor to deal differently with his agent than he otherwise would do, the debt is discharged.[90] Where the minority rule as to bills and notes obtains,[91] however, the bill or note of an agent, received with knowledge of his agency, is regarded as payment of the principal debt.[92]

[§ 46] (3) Bill or Note of Partnership for Private Debt of Partner.[93] In accordance with the general rules above stated,[94] a note executed by a partnership for the private debt of one of the partners is a payment thereof when accepted as such.[95]

[§ 47] (4) Bill or Note of Partner for Debt of Firm.[96] In accordance with the general rules above stated,[97] the execution and delivery by a partner of his individual draft[98] or promissory note,[99] or his acceptance of a draft upon him individually,[1] for a debt of the partnership does not extinguish the firm indebtedness, although done after the dissolution of the partnership,[2] except where the creditor agrees or consents to receive it in payment,[3] and except where such act prejudicially affects the rights of other partners who may be considered as sureties.[4] If, however, the creditor accepts the individual note of each partner for his share of the firm indebtedness, such indebtedness is discharged.[5]

[§ 48] (5) Bill or Note in Partnership Name after Dissolution.[6] In accordance with the general rules above stated,[7] a bill or note executed for the indebtedness of a partnership by the continuing partner or partners, in the firm name, after the dissolution of the partnership or the withdrawal of other partners, is ordinarily not a satisfaction of such indebtedness so as to discharge the retiring partners,[8] except where the creditor agrees or consents to accept it as payment,[9] and not even then when it is received under a mistake of fact,[10] as where the creditor is ignorant of the dissolution of the firm.[11] But where the note prejudices the rights of the nonassenting partners, considered as sureties, their liability is extinguished.[12]

[§ 49] (6) Bill or Note of New Partnership for Debt of Old.[13] While a bill or note executed by a partnership, after reorganization or the admission or withdrawal of partners, for an indebtedness of the old firm, may operate to discharge retiring partners, considered as sureties, by reason of the extension of time of payment,[14] such a bill or note, in accordance with the general rules above stated,[15] will not ordinarily constitute a payment of such indebtedness,[16] especially where the creditor is ignorant of the change in the firm;[17] but it will constitute a payment if it is accepted as such by the creditor.[18]

[a] Check on insolvent bank in which payee is overdrawn.—Where a debtor gave his creditor a check upon a bank which was insolvent, but at the time thereof the creditor had an account in such bank which was overdrawn in a larger amount than the amount of the check, the deposit of the check in the bank and its credit upon the overdrawn account made it perfectly good for the discharge of the debt, it being immaterial whether a bank is insolvent or not if the check is paid. Conway v. Smith Mercantile Co., 6 Wyo. 468, 46 P 1084.

[b] Although the drawee bank fails before remitting the amount of a check to the creditor or his agent, the debt is paid where the check is charged to the debtor's account and credited to the account of the collecting agent. Quarles v. Taylor, 195 N. C. 313, 142 SE 25.

check was received;[27] but a payment other than in due course does not extinguish the debt.[28] A check is accordingly often referred to as conditional payment,[29] the condition being its collectability from the bank upon which it is drawn;[30] but it is not such a conditional payment as to release security.[31]

[§ 51] b. Agreement or Consent of Creditor.[32] Where a creditor agrees or consents to receive a check of his debtor as payment, the original indebtedness is thereby extinguished pro tanto,[33] whether or not the check is actually paid by the drawee upon presentment,[34] and even though payment thereof is stopped by the maker.[35] The agreement need not be express[36] or in writing,[37] and it is sufficient if the circumstances and conduct of the parties show an understanding that the check is taken in satisfaction of the debt.[38] Thus retention of a check under circumstances implying that it is accepted as payment

[c] A check given to an agent of the creditor and paid by the drawee is payment of the debt regardless of the agent's authority to receive the check or obtain payment of it. Kansas City, etc., R. discharges the debt;[39] but mere retention alone, in the absence of any other facts and circumstances indicating its acceptance, does not effectuate a payment.[40]

Effect of fraud or misrepresentation. If the acceptance of a check is induced by fraud or misrepresentation it does not constitute payment.[41]

[§ 52] c. Negotiation or Deposit. The negotiation of the check of a debtor by his creditor to whom it has been delivered,[42] or the deposit of it in a bank as money,[43] renders it an absolute payment and discharges the original indebtedness; but merely depositing it for collection does not constitute its acceptance as payment.[44]

[§ 53] d. Diligence and Laches. Inasmuch as the acceptance by a creditor from his debtor of a check otherwise than as absolute payment implies an undertaking to use due diligence in presenting it for payment,[45] and giving notice of dishonor,[46] if the creditor is guilty of laches or want of diligence whereby the debtor is prejudiced, the check operates as payment of the indebtedness for which it was given,[47] at least to the extent of the debtor's loss,[48] unless such want of diligence is excused.[49] The debt is not discharged, however, where before the expiration of a reasonable time within which to present the check the bank upon which it is drawn fails[50] or is enjoined from making payments.[51]

[§ 54] 4. Certificates of Deposit or of Indebtedness.[52] A debtor is not entitled to make payment by transferring certificates of deposit or of indebtedness to his creditor,[53] except under an agreement so providing,[54] or where the creditor consents to receive them as such;[55] and the mere receipt of such certificates, without agreement or intention that they shall be accepted as payment, does not extinguish the debt.[56] But if a certificate delivered to the creditor is honored or paid, the debt is reduced pro tanto;[57] and if the creditor converts it to his own use the debt is extinguished to the extent of the face value of the certificate.[58]

[§ 55] 5. Municipal Warrants or Orders.[59]

Payments in its own warrants by:

When it is so provided by statute[60] or agreement,[61] or when the creditor so consents,[62] payment may be made by the delivery of municipal warrants, orders, or like securities; but in the absence of such provision or consent they do not constitute a valid payment or tender,[63] and even where, by statute, such warrants are made receivable in payment, the creditor may refuse to receive them in satisfaction of an obligation expressly payable in some other medium,[64] or when they are tendered upon unjustifiable conditions.[65]

[§ 56] 6. Liability of Third Person[66]—a. Order on Third Person for Money or Goods. An order drawn by a debtor upon a third person for the payment or delivery to his creditor of money or goods constitutes a payment when, by agreement, the debt is so payable,[67] or when the creditor consents to accept the order as payment.[68] In the absence of agreement, the creditor is not bound to accept such an order;[69] and the mere receipt of it, without intention to accept it as payment or to discharge the debtor, does not effectuate a payment.[70] But when such an order received by the creditor is subsequently paid, in whole or in part, the debt is thereby discharged or reduced to the extent of the payment.[71]

Diligence in collection. Notwithstanding an order delivered to the creditor was not received under the agreement or with the consent that it should constitute payment, it may be treated as such if he fails to employ due diligence to enforce it or collect payment upon it and as a result thereof the debtor is prejudiced.[72]

Compare Jose v. Baker, 37 Me. 465 (where it was said that an order on a third person is not a satisfaction of a precedent debt unless it be expressly shown that such at the time was the agreement of the parties, but that when such order is given for the purchase price for goods sold at the time of sale it will be presumed that such payment was meant to be absolute and that the purchaser was to be wholly discharged).

[a] Order accepted subject to payment.—When a creditor accepts from his debtor an order on a third person under the agreement that the debt shall be discharged when the order is paid, the order is not a payment, and if then it is not paid action lies on the original demand. Goodrich v. Barney, 2 Vt. 422. See also Proctor v. Mather, 3 B. Mon. [§ 57] b. Assignment of Claim against Third Person.[73] Where it is so agreed or the creditor consents thereto, payment may be made by the assignment by the debtor of a claim against a third person;[74] but the mere acceptance by the creditor of such an assignment does not constitute a payment in the absence of any agreement or intention to receive it as such.[75]

[§ 58] c. Promise or Undertaking of Third Person.[76] A debtor cannot, without the consent of his creditor, substitute another in his stead as debtor,[77] and the mere promise or undertaking of a third person to pay the debt does not relieve the debtor of liability therefor;[78] and, similarly, the receipt by the creditor of a bill or note[79] or a

[a] Insurance policy.—Where a debtor's buildings had been destroyed by fire, the assignment to his creditor of policies of insurance on the buildings, upon which prima facie a cause of action had arisen in favor of the debtor, when such assignment was received as payment of the debt, is binding upon the creditor, whether or not a complete cause of action existed in favor of the debtor against the insurance companies and whether any defense could be made by the companies, when it is not shown that the policies were invalid or uncollectible. Brunswick v. Birkenbeuel, 83 Ill. 413.

[b] Claim in litigation.—Where the debtor transfers to the creditor as payment the right to moneys for which a suit has been brought, a payment to the extent of the amount collected in pursuance of the judgment is thereby effectuated. Crawford v. Woody, 63 N. C. 100.

[c] Where claims are accepted at an agreed valuation, the actual value is immaterial; and so if bad accounts are included or if the assignee accepts the return of goods sold instead of demanding payment of the account the payment effectuated by the assignment is not affected or diminished. [a] Notice of dishonor (1) of a bill or note by the person primarily liable thereon must ordinarily be given to the debtor by the creditor and upon failure thereof the debt is discharged. [b] Duty to sue.—Where a note is taken by a seller of goods, with an agreement that he will endeavor to collect it or return it within two or three months, it does not imply that he is bound to proceed to a suit; nor is he liable for negligence, even though it be shown that a recovery might have been had. Martin v. Pennock, 2 Pa. 376.

[c] Insolvency of maker as excuse for laches.—Where the maker of the note was insolvent and the debtor held security for its payment, the failure of the creditor to sue thereon or give notice of its dishonor does not preclude him from recovering upon the original indebtedness. Kephart v. Butcher, 17 Iowa 240.

[d] Laches not prejudicial.—Where the laches of the creditor causes no loss or damage to the debtor, the failure of the creditor to use due diligence does not discharge the debtor. Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377, 22 S 431, 62 AmSR 105; American Nat. Bank v. National Fertilizer Co., 125 Tenn. 328, 143 SW 597.

[e] Rule inapplicable to public officials.—Where a taxpayer attempted to pay his taxes by delivering to the county treasurer a bank draft, which was held by the treasurer more than three weeks without presentation to the drawee bank, and in the interim the issuing bank failed, the rule that want of diligence in presenting a draft operates to extinguish the debtor's obligation, although applicable between private individuals, cannot govern as between an individual, whose duty it is under the law to pay his taxes and to pay them in money, and a public officer whose duty it is to collect the taxes and collect them in money. Eggleston v. Plowman, 49 S. D. 609, 207 NW 981, 44 ALR 1231.

"By the common law, a debt due on simple contract is not discharged by the creditor's accepting another obligation of the same nature for the same consideration. . . . The new title is not considered as an extinguishment of the old debt, but is treated as a merely collateral and additional security. The same principle prevailed in the civil law. A creditor, by taking a new obligation for a debt, did not extinguish the old title. The original obligation remained in force, and the second was held to be merely an accessory, which of course became extinct when the principal was satisfied. The new title was never held to supersede the original cause of action, unless such was clearly proved to have been the intention of the parties." The Betsy & Rhoda, 3 F. Cas. [a] In California, under Civ. Code Proc. § 440, providing that, when cross demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counterclaim could have been set up, the two demands shall be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other, an amount due may be paid by the debtor by crediting it upon a demand due him from his creditor. [b] Reason for rule.—"Where there is an open account between two parties, all advancements made by one of them to the other, may, (in the absence of any express or implied agreement to the contrary,) be entered in such account, become constituent parts of the account, and be applied upon, or in payment of, the oldest item in the account on the other side; so that in an action of book debt he only is entitled to recover in whose favor the final balance upon the whole account is found; because, in the case supposed, the party making the advancement impliedly recognizes the existence of an unadjusted account, and assents to the application of his advancement thereon, as one of the elements from which the final balance is to be ascertained." agreement or consent there is no right to pay by the transfer of debits or credits or the application of the debt upon a demand due from the other party.[19] In any event, a mere entry of debits or credits is no payment unless payment is actually made thereby;[20] but, on the other hand, omission to credit a payment received does not prevent it from being effectual.[21]

Blake v. Morrisson, 33 Miss. 123.
[c] Mere conversion of property by a creditor to whom its possession was delivered by his debtor does not constitute payment, in the absence of any agreement that such property shall be taken as payment of the debt. Wallingford v. Alcorn, 75 Okl. 295, 183 P 726.

[a] Implied agreement in given kind and quality.—A promise to pay in the wares of a particular trade

The value of goods, chattels, or choses in action delivered as payment is ordinarily, unless otherwise agreed, their market value[30] at the time[31] and place[32] of delivery; but if they are delivered and received at an agreed valuation the actual value is immaterial.[33]

Delivery for sale. A delivery of personalty by a debtor to his creditor to sell it and apply the proceeds upon the debt is not in itself a payment,[34] but payment is effectuated as soon as value is realized from the property[35] to the extent of the amount thereof.[36] Where as a result of undue delay a lower price is received than might reasonably have been realized, the debt is reduced by the amount which could have been received if sale had been seasonably made.[37]

[§ 63] 11. Real Estate. Where it is agreed, either expressly[38] or by implication,[39] that payment may be made by a transfer of real estate, or where such a transfer is accepted by the creditor as payment,[40] it extinguishes the debt pro tanto; but in the absence of such agreement or consent the debtor has no right to make payment in such manner,[41] and a transfer does not amount to payment.[42] Where real estate is conveyed at an agreed valuation as partial payment, the debtor is not entitled to be credited with the rents and profits received therefrom by the creditor,[43] nor with the proceeds of a sale thereof.[44]

Failure of title to the property conveyed in payment does not avoid the payment,[45] the remedy of the grantee being upon the covenants in the deed;[46] but if payment is made conditional upon transfer of good title and the condition fails, no payment is effectuated.[47]

Fraud. No payment results from the pretended conveyance of real estate which does not belong to the debtor[48] or which has no existence.[49]

[§ 64] 12. Services. By agreement or consent of

[b] Payment in merchandise from stock.—Where payment is agreed to be made in merchandise out of the debtor's store, he is at liberty to continue selling his goods without replenishing his stock until the time for delivery comes, so long as he retains sufficient goods for the purpose; and the creditor cannot complain that he is left to a selection from a stock inferior to, or less marketable than, the stock at the date of the contract. St. 484, 22 AmR 328 (holding that, where an obligation is payable in certain specified shares of stock, it is immaterial that at the time of payment such shares had become valueless).

[a] Twenty-five per cent above cost price.—Where an obligation was payable in merchandise, to be delivered at not more than twenty-five per cent above the cost price to the debtor, payment is made by delivering goods at a valuation equal to twenty-five per cent above the price paid for them, although such valuation was more than twenty-five per cent above the market price at the time of delivery. Buck v. Burk, 18 N. Y. 337.

[b] Obligation payable in specified quantity of goods.—Where, after a note payable in cotton became due, the maker delivered some of the cotton, the credit to be given should be based on the quantity, without regard to the fact that the price of cotton had risen since the time when it should have been delivered under the contract. 36. Black v. Roberson, (Ark.) 112 SW 402; Buckland v. Wilson, 28 Wis. 581.

[a] Where the creditor sells such goods with others, or receives advances thereon, the debtor should be allowed such proportion of the whole amount of the proceeds or advances as the goods delivered by him bear to the whole amount of the goods so sold or on which the advances were made. Buckland v. Wilson, 28 Wis. 581.

[b] Dispute as to amount does not affect fact of payment.—Where a horse was delivered under an agreement that it should be sold and the proceeds of sale applied upon the debt, and the creditor exchanged the horse for other property and the parties disagreed as to the amount with which the debt should be credited, payment was made to the extent of the value of the horse as soon as the creditor received such value in the exchange, and a dispute as to its amount cannot change its character as to payment. [a] Agreement may be oral.—Where a conveyance of land, absolute in form, is delivered under an oral agreement that it be considered absolute in lieu of the debt, it is an extinguishment thereof. Graves v. Arizona Cent. Bank, (Cal.) 272 P 1063.

[b] Value determined by creditor.—Where a contract for the sale of land was made by debtors with their creditors, which recited that the creditors were within a reasonable time to ascertain the value of the land, by personal inspection or otherwise, and, after the actual cash value had been so ascertained, to apply the land at such value as payment of the debt, in the absence of fraud the debtors were bound by the value as fixed by the creditors, and inquiry need not be made as to what the actual cash value of the land was. a creditor, services rendered by the debtor may constitute a payment;[50] but in the absence of such agreement or consent the services cannot be considered as payment,[51] and services voluntarily rendered do not extinguish or reduce the debt.[52]

[§ 65] E. Election as to Medium of Payment.[53] Where the contract provides for payment in either of two or more mediums, a debtor may elect to make either mode of payment at the time fixed therefor.[54] But the right of election does not exist after the day when the payment becomes due,[55] and if the promise is to pay in property or money,[56] or in services or money,[57] the creditor is thereafter entitled to payment in money.[58] Where the promise is to pay in specie or other currency, if the debtor fails to make his election the creditor is entitled to payment in specie.[59] If the promise is to pay in certain currency or its equivalent, upon failure of the debtor to elect, the demand becomes absolute for the value of such currency.[60] If the payee has the right of election and fails to exercise it, the promisor is bound to perform his contract by delivering one of the articles stipulated for.[61] A debtor[62] or creditor[63] with the right to choose the medium of payment, having once made his election, is bound thereby. Such election may be revoked, however, where the other party to the contract fails to consummate the transaction.[64]

[§ 66] F. Waiver of Right To Pay or Demand Certain Medium.[65] A debtor may waive his right to make payment in a certain medium.[66] The right of a creditor to demand or receive payment in a particular medium may also be waived, as by the failure to object specifically to a tender on the ground of the medium[67] or by the acceptance of another medium.[68] The fact that the creditor protests while accepting such other medium does not prevent application of the rule.[69] If, however, the creditor, in receiving payment in a medium other than that specified, declares that he will receive it only at its value as compared with the specified medium and the debtor acquiesces, the right to payment of the full value of the specified medium is not waived.[70]

Statutory provisions. Contracts assuming to waive a party's right to receive payment in lawful money are prohibited by statute in some jurisdictions,[71] and the validity of such a statute has been sustained.[72]

IV. EFFECT

[By Felix C. Graber]

[§ 67] A. In General.[73] Payment discharges pro tanto the debt upon which it is made,[74] even though it is returned after acceptance.[75] An obligation which has been extinguished by payment cannot be subsequently revived[76] or transferred.[77]

Before or pending suit.[78] Payment of the debt and costs extinguishes the claim upon which a suit is predicated, although made while the action is pending,[79] and payments made before or pending the suit should be deducted before judgment.[80]

Rhodes v. Hinckley, 6 Cal. 283. (2) Where a payment is made but is returned for the use of the payer, to be repaid at a future time, the payment must still be considered as having been made, and the return thereof as a loan. Vt.—Joy v. Hull, 4 Vt. 455, 24 AmD 625.

Title of payee. Payment vests the payee with title to the thing given in payment,[81] and the party paying cannot subsequently divest the payee of his title.[82]

Existence of debt or contract. Payment of an obligation does not conclusively establish that the party paying was indebted to the payee at the time of the payment,[83] but payment on a contract implies the existence of the contract at the time of payment.[84]

Rights of debtor. It has been held that acceptance of money due tendered without condition carries with it no obligation beyond that of giving proper credit,[85] but upon payment in full the debtor may demand surrender of his written obligation.[86]

[§ 68] B. Part Payment.[87] Part payment of a debt does not bar a claim for the balance,[88] but, it has been held, raises in law an implied promise to pay the balance.[89] Part payment of a claim for which the payer is not liable does not, however, raise such an implied promise,[90] and part payment will not change what is originally a mere moral obligation into a legal debt.[91] On the other hand the payment of a part of a sum which is due does not create an equity in favor of the payer to entitle him to an indefinite delay for the payment of the balance.[92]

Payment pending suit as admission. A part payment pending suit of the claim sued on is not equivalent, as an admission of the cause of action, to a payment of money into court.[93]

[§ 69] C. Payment by One or More Codebtors.[94] A payment made by one or more of two or more joint debtors extinguishes the debt pro tanto.[95] A payment of one debtor's share of a joint debt, however, does not release him from liability for the balance.[96]

[§ 70] D. Payment under Duress.[97] A compulsory payment of a debt to a person other than the creditor without his consent does not discharge the debtor.[98] It has been held, however, that money extorted by a creditor from his debtor by an unlawful execution should be considered a payment of the debt.[99]

"The partial payment of a legal obligation is not payment in full and does not discharge the debt." State v. Hamilton, supra.

[a] Deductions by payor from sum due.—(1) An acceptance of a payment duly credited from which certain deductions have been made by the debtor does not constitute a waiver of the right to object to such deductions. Huntsman v. Monarch Oil, etc., Co., 197 Ky. 607, 247 SW 754. (2) So where the assignor of an interest in an oil and gas lease, whose assignment relieved him from any obligation to pay a portion of the operating costs of the well, accepted payment for the sale of some of the oil from the premises after his proportionate part of the expenses operating the well had been deducted, giving as his reason that he feared for the solvency of the assignee and believed it advisable to take what he could get, his acceptance was not a waiver of his right to be relieved from payment of the operating expenses. Huntsman v. Monarch Oil, etc., Co., supra.

[b] Part payment pending suit.—In the absence of some agreement to that effect, the acceptance of partial payments after the commencement o an action does not constitute a waiver of plaintiff's right of action for the balance still due. Gates v. Green, 151 Cal. 65, 90 P 189.

V. RESCISSION[1]

[By FELIX C. GRABER]

[§ 71] A. Conditional Payment—1. In General. A creditor who has accepted paper, such as a check,[2] bill, or note,[3] in conditional payment[4] of a debt may ordinarily, if such paper has not been paid, rescind the conditional payment and sue upon the original indebtedness.[5]

[§ 72] 2. Return of Medium Received—a. General Rule. A creditor rescinding a conditional payment cannot recover upon the original debt if he fails to account for the paper received,[6] and the necessity for so accounting is not removed by a release from liability on such paper.[7] The obligation to account is satisfied by production of the paper in court to be canceled, delivered to defendant, or otherwise disposed of as the court may direct,[8] and is also satisfied by a showing that such paper has

[a] Recovery of part of debt represented by notes.—(1) A creditor who has received several notes in conditional payment of a debt may, upon discovering that one of them is worthless, rescind his acceptance thereof and, retaining the other notes, recover the amount of the original debt represented by such worthless note. Wiswall v. Harriman, 62 N. H. 671; Buck v. Wilson, 113 Pa. 423, 6 A 97. been surrendered[9] or tendered back[10] to the debtor, or that it has been canceled,[11] destroyed,[12] or lost without having been indorsed or negotiated,[13] or that for some other reason it is not enforceable against him.[14] If negotiable paper is lost after it is indorsed, however, the creditor cannot recover on the original indebtedness, even though a bond of indemnity is tendered to the debtor.[15]

Fraudulent alteration of a note given for the payment of a sum of money takes away the right of the payee to recover on the original demand upon surrender of the note.[16]

Unsatisfied judgment on note. Where a judgment recovered on a note by a third person to whom it had been transferred is in full force, plaintiff cannot recover on the original debt merely by producing the original note for cancellation;[17] but upon tendering an assignment of the judgment he may recover.[18]

[§ 73] b. Exceptions to Rule. A creditor is not required, as a condition precedent to bringing an action upon a debt, to return a worthless check[19] or note[20] which he has accepted in conditional payment thereof. Nor it is necessary to produce a note which was accepted by an agent without authority, the creditor not having subsequently ratified the transaction.[21] If the instrument is not negotiable it is unnecessary to produce it.[22] The general rule has no application to a proceeding in rem founded upon statutory enactment.[23]

[§ 74] B. Absolute Payment. If commercial paper such as a check,[24] bill, or note[25] is received as absolute payment, its nonpayment gives no right of action upon the original indebtedness,[26] except when

[b] Payment stopped.—Where check was given for work performed and materials furnished in repairing an automobile, but payment was stopped and the check therefor became worthless, the plaintiff was not required to return it before suing on the original account, and could treat it as a nullity. [b] Payment of note prior to transfer.—Where the note of a third person had been paid prior to its transfer, the creditor need not show an offer to return the note to the payee debtor. Campbell v. Ayres, 9 Iowa 108.

[c] Failure of security.—Note based on a mortgage, the security of which had been cut off by the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, need not be returned as a condition precedent to maintenance of an action on the original debt. Gillett v. Knowles, 108 Mich. 602, 66 NW 497.

[d] Forged notes.—(1) An offer to return notes, valueless because forgeries as to the supposed makers, is not a condition precedent to the right to recover from the transferor. Nance v. Pope, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 220; Snyder v. Reno, 38 Iowa 329; Howard v. Shirley, 75 Mo. A. 150. (2) But where the note is valid against the maker it is not worthless, even though indorsements upon it are forged, and suit cannot be brought upon the original indebtedness without restoring or offering to restore such note. Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 547.

[e] Where failure to return not prejudicial.—Where a note of third persons is received in payment of a debt on the faith principally of one signature, which proves to be forged, assumpsit can be maintained on the original consideration without previously returning the note, where it is shown that the other makers are insolvent and that no injury can be sustained by defendant because of a failure to return the note. the agreement to receive the payment as absolute payment was induced by fraud.[27] In such case, as in that of rescission of a conditional payment,[28] the creditor does all that is required of him if he produces the paper at the trial and offers to deliver it to defendant.[29]

VI. RECEIPTS[30]

[By Felix C. Graber]

[§ 75] A. Definition. A receipt is a written admission of the fact of payment and receipt of money or thing of value.[31]

[§ 76] B. Nature and Contents. Ordinarily a receipt does not amount to a contract,[32] but it may be so drawn as to be a contract.[33] No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a valid receipt,[34] although ordinarily it must show the amount paid.[35] It may consist of a separate writing,[36] a recital in an instrument,[37] or an indorsement of payment thereon.[38] A cashed check may be a receipt.[39]

[§ 77] C. Construction. In construing a receipt the paper must be viewed in its entirety,[40] and with due regard to the conditions surrounding its execution.[41] Thus the meaning of a clause in a receipt is ascertained by reference to the context of all the

[b] Indorsements of payments made upon notes whether of interest or principal stand upon the same ground as receipts executed by the holder to the maker of the note for the sums received. McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222.

[c] Indorsement on secured note.—Credit for payment by indorsement on secured note is in point of law a credit upon principal of indebtedness, without formal entry. San Diego Constr. Co. v. Mannix, 175 Cal. 548, 166 P 325.

Presumption of payment from indorsements on notes see Bills and Notes § 1321.

39. Yardley v. Iowa Electric Co., 195 Iowa 380, 191 NW 791; Crigler v. Lockard, 3 Ky. Op. 669; Christiana Hardware, etc., Co. v. Sigle, 22 Pa. Dist. 647; Rapp v. Giddings, 4 S. D. 492, 57 NW 237.

40. Yardley v. Iowa Electric Co., 195 Iowa 380, 191 NW 791; and case infra this note.

[a] General and particular words.—When a receipt acknowledges a certain sum in full of certain described promissory notes, and in full of all demands, the general words, although they do not enlarge the particular words as to what transpired at the time, yet do import and may be used to prove that the party giving the receipt had, at the time, no other demands against him to whom the receipt was given. Allen v. Woodson, 50 Ga. 53.

41. Yardley v. Iowa Electric Co., 195 Iowa 380, 191 NW 791. See Henry v. Britt, 197 Ill. A. 167; and cases infra this note.

[a] Denomination of instrument as receipt is not conclusive of its character. Yardley v. Iowa Electric Co., 195 Iowa 380, 191 NW 791.

[b] Omission of word "dollars."—A written instrument in form of a receipt, having in the margin the figures "$1,100," which acknowledges the receipt on a certain day of "eleven hundred on . . . asylum contract of fifty-five thousand dollars," is a receipt for eleven hundred dollars. Butler v. Bohn, 31 Minn. 325, 17 NW 862.

[c] Partial payment or payment in full.—(1) The language of a receipt which recites that the sum acknowledged was received "on the within note," together with the fact that a credit for the amount was indorsed on the note referred to, shows conclusively that it was intended as a partial payment. Hill v. Erwin, 60 Ala. 341. (2) Where a receipt covered several payments of interest on different debts and at the close of the receipt were the words "in full," such words applied to each payment. Bogart v. Van Velsor, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 718.

[d] Refusal to sign receipt in full.—Where a writing read, "Received of . . . in all to date," followed by various sums, and a witness testified that it was not a receipt in full, and it was shown that the party who received it wrote a receipt in full, which the one who gave it refused to sign, it was held that the writing did not amount to a receipt in full, but was a mere statement of payments. Dewees v. Boswick Lumber, etc., Co., 96 Miss. 253, 254, 50 S 865.

[e] Provision on face of check that it was payment in full (1) constitutes a receipt in full as against the payee upon the cashing of the check. Christiana Hardware, etc., Co. v. Sigle, 22 Pa. Dist. 647 ("in full up to date"). (2) But this is so only when it is shown that the payee had knowledge of the presence of such other parts of the instrument which contains it.[42] Ambiguous language is to be construed most strongly against the party who wrote the instrument.[43]

A receipt in full for a particular demand is not conclusive evidence of a general settlement of accounts between the parties.[44] For instance, a receipt for so much money specified to be for certain goods or property purchased will not be construed or presumed to be a satisfaction in full.[45]

A receipt in full of all demands against one is no evidence of the payment of a joint demand against him and others,[46] nor of the payment of obligations held by the receiptor in a different capacity from that in which he executes the receipt;[47] and such a receipt given to a corporation is not evidence of the payment of individual demands against officers of the corporation.[48] A receipt in full of all claims does not ordinarily cover claims which might arise after its execution;[49] and, on the other hand, a receipt in full of all claims from its date up to a certain future date does not cover claims existing prior to the date of the receipt.[50]

[§ 78] D. Operation and Conclusiveness[51]—1. Receipt as Evidence—a. Admissibility—(1) In General. The rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally[52] are applicable in determining the admissibility of receipts as evidence of payment.[53] Receipts given by a party to the action are ordinarily admissible against him as evidence of the payment recited therein,[54] but it has words, or facts are shown which in law would charge him with such knowledge. Muldowney v. Tualin, 38 Pa. Co. 49; Rapp v. Giddings, 4 S. D. 492, 57 NW 237.

[f] Prior installments and interest.—A receipt for a certain installment of principal "with interest to date" sufficiently shows that all previous installments and interest on the agreement had been duly paid. Gillespie v. Wells, 22 Man. 355, 2 DomLR 519, 21 WestLR 231, 2 WestWkly 272.

[g] Time of payment.—A receipt dated Dec. 9, 1867, for the amount due "for the instalment ending 1st November, 1867, of a bond," was not evidence of payment on Nov. 1. Lowe v. Morice, 19 U. C. C. P. (Ont.) 123, 132.

[h] Conditional acknowledgment.—Where plaintiffs in a letter to defendant acknowledged a deduction from an account and added, "on the other hand, we must collect interest on the balance of your current account," the acknowledgment of the deduction was not conditional upon payment of the interest. Baer v. Mendoza, 18 Philippine 240.

[i] Obligations included.—(1) A receipt between defendant and plaintiff's decedent, reciting that it was "in full payment for all claims then due," is broad enough to include a note past-due at that time. Ex p. Baggett, 211 Ala. 610, 101 S 104. (2) The fact that at the time of a settlement of accounts between parties a note made by one to another was not given up does not show that a receipt given by the payee, expressed to be in full of all demands, did not include such note. Cunningham v. Batchelder, 32 Me. 316. (3) The fact that the maker of a note, when called on by counsel for the holder, did not disclose fully his defense to the note, does not show that a receipt held by the maker and stipulating to be in full of all demands did not include the note. Cunningham v. Batchelder, supra.

[j] Particular indorsements construed.—(1) An indorsement of payment of interest "to" a certain date does not include interest for the day specified. Stearns v. Sweet, 78 Ill. 446. (2) An indorsement, "Received on the within 50," has been held too indefinite to entitle the debtor to a credit. Gilpatrick v. Foster, 12 Ill. 355. (3) An indorsement on a note, "Received a deed for three hundred and eleven and thirty-three one-hundredths acres of land," does not show a payment of the note. Pool v. Davis, 135 Ind. 323, 329, 34 NE 1130.

[a] Construction of particular receipts.—(1) A receipt for money, recited to be "in full settlement of account as follows: 40 cubic yards stone @ $4.50 per yard," is not a receipt in full for anything further than the stone specified. Union Pac., etc., R. Co. v. McCarty, 3 Colo. A. 530, 34 P 767. (2) A check given in settlement of work done under a building contract, indorsed by the owner as "in full settlement of contract of Dec. 3, 1909," only covered work included in the contract, and was not in settlement of extra work not included therein. Fowler v. Bushby, 69 Misc. 341, 125 NYS 890.

46. Walker v. Leighton, 11 Mass. 140; Robert v. Garnie, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 14.

[a] A receipt given to one in his own name shows payment on his own account rather than on a joint account, especially where the amount is just sufficient to cover a separate balance and nothing is said about its application. Robert v. Garnie, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 14.

47. Bartholomew v. Bartholomew, 24 Ill. 199.

[a] Other notes held as trustee.—A receipt for a certain sum stated to be in full of all accounts and notes does not evidence payment of notes for a very much larger sum held by the receiptor as trustee for third persons. Bartholomew v. Bartholomew, 24 Ill. 199.

[a] Demand not embraced in suit.—Receipts showing on their face payments made on demands not embracing that in suit are inadmissible. Adamson v. Wood, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 448.

[b] Postal money order receipts are competent to show that plaintiff had purchased money orders, which she testified she mailed to vendor. Gosling v. Jones, (Utah) 257 P 1058.

[c] Receipt for money paid by third person without other explanation is not evidence of payment by defendant. Murphy v. Richardson, 33 Pa. 235.

[d] Receipt not identified with transaction is inadmissible. Lloyd's Est., 5 Pa. Dist. & Co. 719.

[e] Receipt not tending to show payment.—In an action to have a judgment declared satisfied receipts tending to prove that the creditor had purchased the land mortgaged as collateral security at a sheriff's sale are not competent evidence to prove that the judgment had been paid. Wasson v. Hodshire, 108 Ind. 26, 8 NE 621.

[f] Receipt of nominal party.—Under the rule that the declarations of a nominal plaintiff are not admissible to defeat the action, a receipt executed by him is inadmissible as an admission in favor of defendant. Copeland v. Clark, 2 Ala. 388.

[g] Payment by third person.—(1) Notes of the debtor and receipts, in the possession of a third person who closed up the business of the debtor, have been held admissible in an action by him against the debtor, to show payment by such third person out of his own moneys. Scott v. Scott, 36 Ga. 484. (2) So the receipt of B to C showing that C paid money for the benefit of A is admissible in a controversy between A's creditors in mortgage foreclosure proceedings to prove payment of such money by C for A. Locke v. Porter Gold, etc., Min. Co., 41 Cal. 305.

been held error to admit a receipt where its execution was not proved,[55] and a receipt is not admissible where a requirement that payment be pleaded was not complied with.[56] To be evidence of payment, the receipt must be one executed by the creditor or his agent authorized to give a receipt,[57] and have come into the possession of the person who is contended to have made the payment.[58] If the creditor alleges that the receipt has been altered and increased, the debtor may show that the receipt was in its present condition soon after it was signed and before the action was brought.[59]

As against strangers. A receipt is ordinarily not evidence of the payment thereby acknowledged as against strangers thereto,[60] but there are exceptions to this rule.[61] Thus the receipt of a person who is pointed out in the contract of the party against whom it is offered is admissible;[62] and the receipt of an unauthorized third person is competent evidence of payment when accompanied by evidence of the acceptance of the money by the person entitled thereto,[63] but an admission in the receipt that it was in full to date is not admissible against the latter.[64]

Indorsements of credits by the creditor on the instrument sued on are competent evidence against him as admissions of payment.[65]

[§ 79] (2) Bills, Notes, or Checks.[66] A note is admissible in connection with other evidence to show that it was a payment of the debt sued on,[67] but in the absence of such other evidence a note is not admissible.[68] A note is also admissible to explain a receipt and rebut any presumption that absolute payment was made.[69] While possession of a bill or note by the maker may be evidence that it has been paid,[70] bills, notes, and the like, signed by the debtor, payable to the creditor and in the possession of the debtor, without proof that they have been in the possession of the creditor, are not admissible to show that the amount thereof has been paid by the debtor to the creditor.[71] Notes and checks relating to long prior closed transactions and not to any involved in the case are inadmissible in the absence of any showing that they constituted all the transactions between the parties.[72]

Bank checks of the debtor payable to the order of the creditor and indorsed by him are admissible in evidence to show payment of the debt for which they were given.[73] If, however, the check was not indorsed by the creditor, as where it was drawn payable to bearer, it ordinarily affords no evidence of payment to the creditor;[74] but where it appears that the bank had paid other checks drawn by the payor to the payees without requiring indorsement, such unindorsed check is admissible,[75] and a draft drawn to the order of the drawee himself, and given to the creditor, is admissible on the question of payment, without being indorsed by the payee.[76] A paid check drawn by defendant's wife has been held admissible in the absence of proof of any other transaction to which it could be applied,[77] but a partner's individual check is inadmissible where he testifies that a debt had been paid with firm money.[78] A bank draft marked "paid" is not admissible to show who paid the draft.[79]

[a] Payment in full.—(1) Where the creditor presents a bill for services which is paid and receipted, he cannot, in the absence of special circumstances, claim anything more for services prior to that time. Goodson v. Detroit Bd. of Health, 114 Mich. 345, 72 NW 185; Wilkinson v. Crookston, 75 Minn. 184, 77 NW 797. (2) The rule applies also where a receipt in full was given for an unliquidated account. Danziger v. Hoyt, 120 N. Y. 190, 24 NE 294 [aff 46 Hun 270].

[b] Receipt given to one of two joint debtors.—A receipt given by a creditor to one of two joint debtors who paid the whole of the debt is prima facie evidence of the payment. Ballance v. Frisby, 3 Ill. 63.

[c] A receipt importing a settle-

only of what appears on its face,[82] and has been held not to be even prima facie evidence of payment without proof of its execution.[83] A receipt is not evidence that payment was made to an authorized person.[84]

Payment by bill or note.[85] Although it has been held that a receipt of payment by bill or note is not sufficient in the absence of other evidence to show an extinguishment of the original claim,[86] such a receipt has in other cases been held to be prima facie evidence that the bill or note was accepted as absolute payment.[87] The taking of a bill or note and giving of a receipt as for so much cash does not, in most jurisdictions, amount to evidence of an express agreement to take the paper in payment;[88] but where a bill or note is regarded as absolute payment unless the contrary appears,[89] such a receipt is considered strong proof of an extinguishment of the original debt.[90] A receipt given for a bill or note to be payment when paid shows that the paper was not taken as absolute payment.[91]

Indefiniteness and uncertainty in receipts may be ment is prima facie evidence that the parties then adjusted all matters touching the business or adventure to which it relates. Levi v. Karrick, 13 Iowa 344.

[d] Recital in deed that the purchase money has been received is prima facie evidence of payment. Rogerson v. Leggett, 145 N. C. 7, 58 SE 596; Bayliss v. Williams, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 440; Russell v. Beckert, (Tex. Civ. A.) 195 SW 607.

[e] Recital in check.—(1) Where one accepts and collects a check, bearing upon its face a statement that it is "in full" of all demands, it will be presumed that the check was received in discharge of all preëxisting liabilities of the maker. Greer v. Laws, 56 Ark. 37, 18 SW 1038; Garriott v. Brandenburg Constr. Co., 199 Ky. 673, 251 SW 935; Walsh v. Gray, 214 App. Div. 296, 212 NYS 230; Krauser v. McCurdy, 174 Pa. 174, 34 A 518; Price v. (2) Where a check recited on its face that it was in payment of royalties in full to date and was received, indorsed, and cashed without objection, the check was then prima facie evidence of the payment and of all the facts therein recited. Gregg v. Roaring Springs Land, etc., Co., 97 Mo. A. 44, 70 SW 920. (3) In an employee's action for payment for overtime, where it appeared that pay checks purporting to be in full for services were regularly given and accepted by plaintiff, such acceptance constituted presumptive evidence that the several payments were in full for all services, as recited by the indorsements thereon. Yardley v. Iowa Electric Co., 195 Iowa 380, 382, 191 NW 791 (checks on their face recited that they were "in full payment for services rendered to and including —"). (4) Where a servant accepts and indorses checks for salary, each of which contains the words "for all services rendered up to and including above date," there arises a presumption of payment in full, which is, however, rebuttable, as the checks containing the statements quoted were merely receipts. McGuire v. Interurban R. Co., 199 Iowa 203, 215, 200 NW 55.

such as to render them of no value and require them to be disregarded.[92]

[§ 81] (2) As Shifting Burden of Proof or of Evidence. The fact that defendant, relying upon payment as a defense, is able to produce a receipt from plaintiff or his authorized representative for the amount claimed to be due does not shift the burden of proof of payment from defendant;[93] but as a receipt is prima facie evidence of payment[94] the production thereof imposes upon plaintiff the burden of going forward with evidence to impeach the receipt.[95] If the receipt is impeached, the party claiming payment has the burden of going forward with further proof of payment.[96] Where the receipt of money to be credited on a note does not describe the note, it is incumbent upon defendant to show the note sued on was intended.[97] A debtor alleging payment in full by a check marked "in full of all demands" has the burden of showing that the check contained those words when it was accepted by the creditor.[98] Where the debtor produces a receipt for a sum less than the debt in full therefor, the burden has been held to be on one contesting its sufficiency to show that the debt had not been reduced to the sum stated in the receipt;[99] but where a receipt is expressly stated to be on account, there is no burden on the creditor to show that it was not in full satisfaction of the claim.[1]

[§ 82] (3) Conclusiveness.[2] While an unexplained and uncontradicted receipt is a complete bar to an action for the amount of the debt represented thereby,[3] neither an ordinary receipt ac-

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Where a creditor disputes a receipt proved to have been executed by him, he has the burden of proving that it was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. Fox v. Fox, 107 S. C. 250, 92 SE 477. (2) Where a deed recites payment of the consideration, the burden is on the party claiming that the consideration was not paid to produce evidence in support of his contention. Anderson v. Cole, 234 Mo. 1, 136 SW 395. (3) Where one who had furnished logs under a written contract signed receipts which showed on their faces that all the logs received had been paid for, such receipts, if open to attack, at least impose upon plaintiff the burden of proving that there was a shortage in the count represented thereby. Partridge v. Northern Maine Seaport R. Co., 111 Me. 589, 90 A 618.

(2) One who has received, indorsed, and used a check to his order, reciting that it is "in full" to a certain date, has the burden of proving that there was an indebtedness to him in excess of the amount of the check. Norfolk Hosiery, etc., Mills Co. v. Westheimer, 121 Va. 130, 92 SE 922. (3) Where receipts signed by an employee for wages indicated on their face that all wages have been paid in full, but the employee claims an additional sum, the burden is upon him to show that he rendered services pursuant to an understanding that he was to be paid an additional sum therefor. Meginnes v. McChesney, 179 Iowa 563, 160 NW 50, LRA 1917E 1060. (4) A receipt, "Received . . . in various payments, at this date," prima facie refers to payments on that day, and the burden is on plaintiff to show that it meant "up to" that day. Moore v. Korty, 11 Ind. 341. (5) A receipt reciting that it is "in full payment for all claims due . . . to date" includes a note which is past due at the time, and places upon the creditor the burden of proving that such note was not in fact included in the receipt. Ex p. Baggett, 211 Ala. 610, 611, 101 S 104.

[a] Failure to read receipt before signing.—(1) Ordinarily the mere negligence of a person signing a receipt without reading it will not conclude him nor prevent explanation or denial of what it contains. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lovelace, 57 Kan. 195, 45 P 590; Boardman v. Gaillard, 60 N. Y. 614 [aff 1 Hun 217, 3 Thomps. & C. 695]; Swanson v. White, 55 App. Div. 631, 66 NYS 787; Cornell v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 9 NYSt 72; Elliot v. Logan, 62 N. C. 163. (2) This is especially true where the creditor was induced to sign the paper by the misrepresentation or fraud of the other party. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lovelace, supra. (3) But where the party signing the receipt had an opportunity to read it and was chargeable with knowledge of its contents, his agent having read it, it is unconscionable that he should later be heard to say that he did not intend to do what the paper signed by him says he did. tacked on the ground of fraud,[7] ignorance,[8] mistake of fact,[9] duress,[10] or want of consideration,[11] or because it was executed by one who had no authority to do so;[12] but not on the ground of a mere mistake in the legal effect of the writing.[13] Where the debtor signs a receipt in full, believing it is only a receipt for a part payment, he need not return the money received in order to enable him to recover the balance due.[14]

Receipt under seal. Under the rules of common law, in the absence of a direct attack upon its validity, a receipt under seal is conclusive of the fact of payment.[15]

Payment by bill or note. Like other receipts,[16] a receipt of payment by bill or note is not conclusive upon the creditor.[17]

[§ 83] 2. Evidence To Overcome Receipt.[18] It has been said that a receipt is evidence of a high order as to the truth of its recitals,[19] and so, although it is ordinarily for the jury to determine the weight to be given to statements contained in the receipt,[20] which may be overcome by any evidence calculated to satisfy the minds of the jury,[21] it is usually held that one attacking a receipt must establish the facts by a clear and unmistakable preponderance of the evidence.[22] Thus it has been said that a receipt can only be overcome by convincing,[23] clear and convincing,[24] clear and satisfactory,[25] or clear and direct[26] evidence, or by unequivocal testimony,[27] and that a receipt should only be set aside for weighty reasons.[28]

Genuineness of receipt. Where the genuineness of the receipt is disputed, however, the rule that a receipt's effect can be done away with only by clear

[§ 84] A. Definition and Origin. "Application of payments," also referred to as "appropriation of payments,"[32] and in the civil law as "imputation of payment,"[33] is the application of money or other form of payment to the discharge of one or more of several debts owing to the creditor by the debtor.[34] The rules governing the application of payments have their origin in the civil law, but in this country, in so far as the common law prevails, the rules of the civil law have been greatly modified and in many respects entirely repudiated.[35]

[§ 85] B. General Statement and Scope of Rule. Payment will be applied as the debtor directs. If he does not apply at the time he makes his payment, the creditor has the same right if he exercises it within certain limitations of time. If the creditor does not, then the court makes an application[36] according to rules of law hereinafter stated.[37] While it has been said that the rule applies only where there are two debts,[38] and not to particular items of an entirety under an entire contract,[39] it is extended to a current account made up of different items constituting in the aggregate a single indebtedness[40] and to appropriations between principal and interest.[41] The rule is not confined to payments made in money but is extended to payments made in commodities or services,[42] provided the debtor's prior right to direct application,[43] or the rule in other respects, is not impaired.[44]

[§ 86] C. Applicability to Involuntary Payments.[45] The rule giving a debtor or creditor a right to direct application of voluntary payments has no application to involuntary payments,[46] such as result from an execution[47] or judicial sales.[48] In such cases neither the debtor[49] nor, as it is generally held, the creditor[50] has a right to make an application, although there is some authority to the effect that the creditor has the right to direct the application of involuntary as well as voluntary payments,[51] especially where necessary to secure to himself the benefit of all the security to which under contract he is entitled.[52] In cases where neither

[a] "The reason for the rule which confers upon the debtor the right primarily to direct the application of a payment voluntarily made by him is apparent. Until the money is actually paid over, it belongs to him, and he may do with it as he sees fit. If he makes a specific direction, the creditor must observe it or refuse to accept the payment. If he provided the payment is a voluntary one,[58] and the debt to which application is directed is one owing from the debtor to the creditor to whom payment is made.[59] For example, the debtor may apply the payment to an illegal demand,[60] or to principal to the exclusion of interest,[61] or to a secured to the exclusion of an unsecured debt,[62] or may direct that the payment be applied equally on several obligations.[63] It is immaterial that the creditor is acting in a fiduciary capacity,[64] or that the debtor did not fully perform his contract.[65] The debtor's right to direct the application of a payment made by him may be limited by a condition to the acceptance of such payment imposed by the creditor,[66] or by his agreement with the creditor.[67] On the other hand, the debtor's application to a particular debt may be supported by contract between the parties providing for application to that debt.[68] And where dealings tantamount to an unqualified acceptance of payment by the creditor are shown, the debtor's application becomes effective through agreement of the parties,[69] even though the application is a departure from a previously existing contract between the parties.[70]

[§ 88] 2. Time for Appropriation.[71] The weight of authority holds that the debtor must direct the application of his payment at or before the time of payment,[72] or at least before the creditor, acting on the debtor's omission, has done so.[73] But even where the creditor has failed to act, the debtor cannot direct application long after payment has been made,[74] or after controversy or litigation has been instituted.[75] Nor can the representative of the debtor direct application after his death of pay-accepts and retains the money, the law will treat the payment as having been applied as directed." Monidah Trust Co. v. Hruze, 62 Mont. 444, 449, 205 P 232, 233 [cit Cyc].

"The question is not whether, in law, he can be compelled to pay the illegal debt, but whether, in fact he did pay it. His application of money to the payment of a particular debt is nothing more than his payment of that debt. His payment of the illegal claim was legal. State v. Rand, 51 N. H. 361. And if it were not, the law would not change it into a payment of some other claim. His lawful purpose of paying that item was irrevocably executed by his delivery of the money, as the plaintiff's purpose of violating the law was irrevocably executed by his delivery of the liquor. He paid the item which he intended to pay." Lauten v. Rowan, supra.

"The claim may be one which the law will not enforce, it may be in violation of its provisions, and the party paying may have the right to recover it back, still the money must be applied by the party receiving it, as the debtor when making the payment shall direct. When however the creditor has two demands, one recognized by law, the other arising on a matter forbidden by law, and an unappropriated payment is made, the law will afterwards apply it in discharge of the demand which it acknowledges, and not that which it prohibits." ments made by the debtor during his lifetime.[76] The debtor may direct application after payment if the creditor agrees to it,[77] and such agreement will be implied if subsequent payments are made on condition that prior payments shall be applied as directed and the creditor accepts the subsequent payments on that condition.[78] The debtor may designate the application after suit, if such payment was made upon an agreement which the creditor had repudiated.[79] So if the creditor procures possession of the money of his debtor, without his consent, unless it is by a legal proceeding binding upon the debtor, the latter does not thereby lose his right to make application of the funds so obtained to any one of several demands held by the creditor against him.[80]

[§ 89] 3. What Constitutes, and Sufficiency.[81] A direction by the debtor as to the application of payments may be shown by an express agreement between the debtor and creditor,[82] or by the express declaration of the debtor,[83] a specific direction for application prevailing over a general direction, where they are in conflict.[84] Or direction of application may be implied from circumstances showing the debtor's intention.[85] For instance, as between a disputed demand and an admitted debt, the intention of the debtor is presumably to apply the payment to the admitted debt;[86] and as between a claim that he knew nothing about, and a debt of which he had knowledge, an intention to pay the known debt is presumed.[87] Where payment of one of two debts is demanded and payment is made in response to that demand,[88] or where inquiry by the debtor is made as to the amount of one of two debts and payment is then made in the stated amount,[89] an intention to apply the payment to the debt on which demand or inquiry is made is reasonably to be inferred. Payment of the exact sum due on one of two claims has been called "irrefragable evidence" to show that the sum was intended in payment of the claim it would exactly pay;[90] but by other authorities it is regarded as a circumstance which, in the absence of express direction, the jury might well consider in determining whether or not that was the intent of the debtor.[91] If the direction is given in words, these words must be communicated to the creditor,[92] and if circumstances are relied on as indicating the appropriation, knowledge of these circumstances must be traced to the creditor, since the mere intent of the debtor, not communicated to the creditor, nor attended by any act or declaration manifesting it to him, is insufficient.[93] But where,

"A person owing money under distinct contracts has, undoubtedly, a right to apply his payments to whichever debt he may choose; and although prudence might suggest an express direction of the application of his payments, at the time of their being made; yet there may be cases in which this power would be completely exercised, without any express direction given at the time. A direction may be evidenced by circumstances, as well as by words. A payment may be attended by circumstances which demonstrate its application, as completely as words could demonstrate it. A positive refusal to pay one debt, and an acknowledgment of . . . another, with a delivery of the sum due upon it would, we think, be such a circumstance." Per Marshall, C. J., in Tayloe v. through the creditor's fault, the debtor is ignorant of circumstances affecting the application of his payment, his intent prevails over any contrary application by the creditor.[94]

[§ 90] 4. Effect of Debtor's Application[95]—a. In General. Where a debtor directs the manner in which his payment is to be applied, the creditor, if he accepts the payment,[96] must apply it accordingly,[97] the rule applying to payments by draft as well as to cash payments,[98] and to directions to pay a part of the value received to another creditor.[99] This rule also applies to payments which were made under agreement between the debtor and creditor as to their application.[1]

[§ 91] b. On Creditor's Right To Divert Application. The application of the payment cannot be diverted without the consent of the debtor,[2] even though the payment is made in property on which the creditor has a lien.[3] Nor can the creditor's diversion be justified by the circumstance that he could not lawfully accept the payment for application as directed, and that he would have had a right to accept it and apply it as he did in the absence of specific direction by the debtor.[4] Nor where there are several debts arising out of several contracts can the creditor justify an application of payment under one contract to the debt under another by claiming that there had been a breach of the contract under which payment was made.[5] But where the creditor qualifies his acceptance by attaching conditions or reservations thereto,[6] or where he applies the payment differently from the direction of the debtor,[7] the latter will be bound thereby if by acquiescence or other acts he indicates his acceptance of the con-

Vt.—Sawyer v. Howard, 86 Vt. 63, 83 A 535.

[a] Renewal of note.—Where a person, indebted on two separate notes, directs that a payment be applied upon a note designated, and the creditor applies it on the other note, the debtor's subsequent acceptance of the canceled note and renewal of the note on which he directed payment to be made is a ratification of the application. Cleveland Nat. Bank v. Amos, 37 Okl. 674, 133 P 204.

[b] Accepting paid note and collateral.—Where defendant, who was indebted to plaintiff on a number of notes, sent him a check after suit on the notes, requesting it to be applied on the suit, and plaintiff applied it to the earliest note, which was barred by limitations, but which was secured by a collateral note, defendant, who did not object when that note together with the collateral was returned to him, waived all right to demand that the payment be applied to those notes on which recovery dition or reservation, or his ratification of the creditor's application. A failure to object after knowledge of the creditor's diversion to other accounts is not in itself alone acquiescence by the debtor within the meaning of this rule.[8] A fortiori, there is no acquiescence by the debtor where it is shown that he was ignorant of the creditor's diversion to other debts.[9] Nor does the fact that a debtor accepts receipts for payments as having been made "on account" estop him from showing that he directed the credits to be placed on another debt or account.[10]

[§ 92] c. On Debtor's Right To Alter Application. At the time of payment the debtor may change a direction previously made.[11] On the other hand, the debtor has no right, after the payment has been made, to change the application without the consent of the creditor.[12] For instance, the direction of the debtor, or his consent, to apply payments to an illegal or invalid debt cannot be changed without the consent of the creditor.[13] Nor can a debtor who pledges collateral on one account direct that it stand as security for another account without the creditor's consent.[14] But where a creditor consents to a change in the application made after payment, he will be bound,[15] and he is held to have given such consent where he retains a subsequent payment conditioned by the debtor on a change in the application of the earlier payment.[16]

[§ 93] 5. Liability of Creditor for Misappropriation. A creditor who retains the payment but fails to apply it as directed is liable for breach of contract,[17] but to the debtor only.[18] He is not liable, however, in an action for money had and received where, notwithstanding the misapplication, the debtor has benefited thereby to the same extent as he would have if the payment had been applied as directed and where to allow a recovery would work an injustice to the creditor.[19]

[§ 94] E. By Creditor[20]—1. Right To Apply—a. General Rule. The general rule is that if the debtor makes no specific appropriation, the creditor may apply the payment to any one of the two or more debts owed him by such debtor,[21] although the civil-law rule allows the creditor to appropriate as he pleases only when the appropriation is a matter of indifference to the debtor;[22] and it has also been said that, under special circumstances raising reasonable inferences as to the intention of the party paying, the law takes the option out of the hands of the creditor and makes the appropriation in accordance with the presumed intention of the debtor.[23] Following the common-law rule,[24] it has been held that the creditor may apply a payment either on a note or on an account,[25] or on one of several notes or bills,[26] or apportion the payment among several notes, bills, or bonds,[27] even though the debtor when he made the payment had forgotten that some of the notes existed,[28] or distribute it between other debts.[29] The rule applies also to payments on a judgment rendered on two or more debts,[30] provided only that application is made in reduction of the judgment;[31] to payments on a mortgage securing

two or more debts, provided the application is made in reduction of the mortgage;[32] to the proceeds of collateral sold by the creditor in liquidation of his claims;[33] to dividends from collateral held by the creditor as security for all his claims;[34] and to payments made to the government.[35] The creditor may apply the payment to an unsecured rather than a secured claim,[36] even though the money was procured from persons who intended that the payment should be applied to the secured debt, provided the creditor knew nothing of it,[37] or to any one of two or more secured claims,[38] or to the most precarious of his secured claims,[39] or he may apportion the payments among the secured notes in his own interest and for his own protection.[40]

[§ 95] b. Principal and Interest.[41] The creditor may apply a payment to the satisfaction of interest rather than the principal,[42] but the creditor cannot apply payments to interest not due,[43] or not collectable under the terms of the contract.[44] Some authorities hold that, in the absence of agreement, the creditor may insist on such application;[45] other authorities hold that this is the only way in which he can apply it;[46] but unless application to interest is compulsory,[47] the creditor may apply a payment to the principal of the debt,[48] even where the interest is in arrears and because of such fact the debtor is not entitled to the benefit of a moratorium act.[49] In jurisdictions holding that application must be made to interest where interest is due,[50] an application to principal cannot be made so long as there is interest due and unpaid.[51] Where interest is due on two obligations, the payment may be applied to the interest on either.[52]

[§ 96] c. Items of Current Account.[53] While there is authority to the effect that the creditor cannot apply a payment to any item he pleases in a running account,[54] unless done with the consent of the debtor,[55] it is more commonly held that, where there is a running account, the creditor may apply a payment thereon as he desires.[56] So the creditor may appropriate the payment to the oldest items of the account,[57] even though such items are barred by the statute of limitations;[58] and where he applies a payment generally on an open running account without declaring an intention to apply it to any specific item, the presumption is that he intended an application to the oldest items of the account.[59] It is only a presumption, however, and may be rebutted by evidence that the creditor had no such intention.[60]

[§ 97] 2. Limitations of Right—a. In General. The rule does not apply to involuntary payments,[61] nor to other payments where the debtor has had no opportunity to direct the application,[62] nor does it authorize the appropriation of a payment to a debt for which the debtor is not responsible,[63] nor to a debt the validity of which the debtor denies,[64] nor to a fictitious claim,[65] nor on a debt the payor owes a third person.[66] So if one of the debtor's liabilities is contingent, as where the creditor is his indorser or surety and has not paid the money, the latter cannot apply payments to such account.[67] Of course the creditor cannot apply a payment on a paid obligation,[68] nor on a debt other than the debt designated by the debtor, where such designation has been made with the knowledge of the creditor[69] or under circumstances charging the creditor with knowledge of it.[70] Nor can the creditor apply a payment contrary to the terms of an agreement as to application previously entered into between himself and the debtor.[71]

Where a particular debt is to be paid in a particular way, as by the rendition of services, the creditor cannot apply the value of such services to another claim.[72]

Unjust or inapplicable application. The creditor cannot apply a payment so as to be inequitable and unjust to the debtor,[73] the equities considered being those only which exist between the debtor and creditor and not those which arise out of transactions between the debtor and third persons and of which the creditor himself has no notice.[74] But, under the common-law rule, the creditor is not bound to apply a payment in the way most beneficial to the debtor,[75] although at this point the common-law rule varies from that of the civil law.[76]

[§ 98] b. Illegal and Unenforceable Claims.[77] While the creditor may apply a payment on a claim which he cannot enforce,[78] such as an oral one within the statute of frauds,[78] he cannot apply a payment to an illegal claim,[80] such as a claim for usurious interest,[81] a distinction being drawn between claims which are merely unenforceable and those which are malum in se or malum prohibitum.[82] The creditor may appropriate a payment, however, to an illegal claim with the debtor's consent either express or implied,[83] and consent will be implied from the course of dealing between the creditor and debtor,[84] and by the fact that the amount of the payments exceeds the amount of the legal items.[85] But where the creditor receives the payment from a receiver whose duty it is to protect the interests of the debtor, he cannot then apply the payment to a debt which the receiver in the execution of his trust could not have legally paid.[86]

[§ 99] c. Joint Debts and Debts of Other Persons.[87] A creditor may apply a general payment either to a joint or several indebtedness of the debtor.[88] Where a creditor holds a debt payable to himself and another payable to himself and a third person jointly, he must apply the payment ratably on the two debts.[89] So if a debt is owed to two persons jointly, the one to whom part payment is made cannot appropriate it exclusively to his portion of the debt.[90] Where payment is made by one liable individually and also as a trustee,[91] executor,[92] surety,[93] or survivor of a community estate,[94] the creditor can apply the payment only to the individual debt. A creditor cannot apply a payment by his debtor to a debt owed to the creditor by somebody else.[95]

[§ 100] d. Debts Not Due; Order of Accrual or Maturity.[96] A creditor cannot apply the payment on a debt not due to the exclusion of one due or overdue.[97] Accordingly an application by the creditor of an undirected payment to debts in the order of accrual or maturity will be upheld.[98] The rule applies as between guaranteed accounts and accounts not guaranteed,[99] an application to an unguaranteed open account already due rather than to a guaranteed note not yet due being upheld,[1] and an application to an unguaranteed account not due in preference to a guaranteed account already due being set aside.[2] Nor can the order of maturity of the notes be disregarded in order to apply payments on later unsecured notes leaving earlier secured notes unpaid.[3] The rule does not apply to advancements made generally by the debtor on two or more accounts not yet due, and applied by the creditor to the different accounts at the time the advancements were made so as to give the debtor a right when one account became due to alter the applications already made from the account not yet due to the past-due account.[4] Nor does the rule apply to notes maturing at different times but representing an indebtedness incurred at the same time. In such case, the creditor may apply an undirected payment to a subsequently maturing note which is due, leaving an earlier maturing note unpaid.[5]

[§ 101] e. Payment from Particular Fund.[6] When the money with which the payment is made is known to the creditor to have been derived from a particular source or fund, he cannot, without the consent of the debtor, apply it otherwise than to the exoneration of that source or fund.[7] A fortiori, such application must be made when the parties have made a prior agreement that it shall be so made.[8] The creditor, however, is not liable if he applies the payment to another debt in ignorance of the source from which the payment came.[9] An example of a payment from a source known to the creditor exists in the case of proceeds from the sale by the mortgagee of property mortgaged or pledged to secure a certain indebtedness, the rule requiring the creditor to apply the proceeds in payment of such indebtedness,[10] unless the debtor consents to its application to another debt.[11] If the secured indebtedness is in the form of several distinct debts, an application to them all is proper,[12] or if the mortgage in terms secures certain notes and "any other notes or evidences of indebtedness which the mortgagee may hereafter have or hold" against the mortgagor. the mortgagee's power to apply is extended to any or all claims he may have against the mortgagor.[13] Where separate mortgages are given, each to secure a distinct portion of the debt, the proceeds from each must be applied to the portion of the debt which it secures.[14] The rule limiting the creditor's right to apply payments as he wishes has no application where the payment is voluntarily made by the mortgagor,[15] or where the payment is made from money obtained by a sale of the equity by the mortgagor.[16] And the rule does not apply where the creditor of a bankrupt is allowed dividends on the entire amount of his claims both secured and unsecured,[17] or where it clearly appears that the secured creditor receiving the money paid it in the debtor's behalf to third persons holding claims against the latter, and that he had no interest in such payments and had acted in good faith only as the agent of the debtor in the transaction.[18]

[d] Crediting a payment in a particular way in a pleading in an action after the payment is made is not an application within the meaning of the rule. Scannell v. Hub Brewing Co., 178 Mass. 288, 59 NE 628.

[a] Admission by letter.—(1) Where a creditor to whom a partial payment of an account had been made wrote the guarantor of the debt demanding payment of the balance, nam-press declarations or acts of the parties, is not sufficient.[22] An alleged appropriation by an agent of one of the parties is not established in the absence of evidence that the agent was authorized to make the appropriation.[23]

[§ 103] b. Particular Acts. The entry of a credit on a particular account is evidence of an appropriation by the creditor to that account,[24] an entry of a credit on a general account being evidence of an appropriation by the creditor to the earlier items in that account,[25] unless it clearly appears from the other circumstances in the case that the intention of the creditor was not to apply the payments to the earlier items.[26] It is not necessary to notify the debtor of the appropriation in order to give that effect to an entry by the creditor,[27] but in the absence of notice to the debtor the entry is not conclusive evidence of an appropriation irrevocably made.[28] When such credit is made and an account rendered to the debtor showing such application, the evidence of an irrevocable appropriation is then complete.[29] An indorsement of a payment on a note is sufficient evidence of its application to that note,[30] but under the circumstances of the case it may not show an intention to apply it first to the interest and then to the principal of the note.[31] In the absence of notice to the debtor, indorsement of payment on a note is not, however, conclusive evidence of an irrevocable appropriation.[32] In jurisdictions where the creditor may make application at any time prior to judgment or verdict,[33] the institution of the suit evidences the creditor's application of payments to items of the account other than those sued on.[34] In jurisdictions holding that the creditor loses his right to make application if he does not exercise it before controversy arises,[35] the commencement of the suit is not evidence of an intention to apply.[36] And of course the commencement of suit has no significance whatever as to application of a payment subsequently made,[37] although it has been held that in such case, if the payment is made before judgment, the taking of judgment constitutes an election to apply the payment on a debt other than the one in action.[38]

[§ 104] 4. Time for Appropriation.[39] By the rule of the civil law the creditor was bound to make his appropriation at the time of the payment,[40] but at common law the creditor is not compelled to exercise his right of application at the time the payment is made.[41] There is much conflict among the authorities, however, as to how long the right exists. Some decisions lay down the broad rule that the creditor's right of application is not limited in time,[42] but may be exercised "up to the very last moment,"[43] except that it cannot be applied after judgment.[44] By other decisions the application must be before a controversy has arisen,[45] while another line of cases holds that it may be before suit

ing it at a figure based on the assumption that the payment already made had been applied to the unsecured portion of the debt, receives a letter from the guarantor promising that the sum named would be paid on a certain date, the application of payment to the unsecured part of the debt is established. Compton v. Ahrens, etc., Mfg. Co., (Tex. Civ. A.) 151 SW 884, 885 [cit Cyc]. (2) Where a creditor writes to his debtor that a particular appropriation of a payment will be made subject to his approval and the debtor signifies his acquiescence by not answering the letter, the appropriation is sufficiently established. brought,[46] and still others that it may be applied before verdict or judgment.[47] It has also been held that the appropriation must be made within a reasonable time,[48] but application of a payment to a note not due at the time the payment was made cannot be postponed to a time when the note has matured, when to do so would result in prejudice to third parties.[49]

[§ 105] 5. Effect of Application.[50] After the creditor has made an application of a payment, it cannot be altered except by mutual consent.[51] But a creditor may show an actual application of a payment differently from that indicated in the unauthorized memorandum of his agent,[52] and he may also correct an application inadvertently made to a particular debt when he was under legal obligation to make it to another,[53] and after making one application the parties may agree that the credit be changed and otherwise applied.[54] The debtor is estopped from questioning the application made by the creditor where he receives an account or receipt applying payments in a certain way and fails to object,[55] even though the application was made by the creditor in violation of an alleged agreement between the parties,[56] or where he pays the balance due on the account after deducting the payment as applied,[57] or where he deals with the creditor for a long period after the latter's application of the payments with knowledge of such application and without objecting thereto.[58]

[§ 106] F. By Court—1. Right and Duty To Make. If neither party makes an application of a payment the court will do so,[59] or the jury will make the application acting on the evidence and under the instruction of the court.[60] The court will not make an application where there is evidence of an appropriation by either the debtor or creditor.[61]

[§ 107] 2. Intent of Parties. Payments by the debtor will be applied according to the intention of the parties where that can be determined with reasonable certainty,[62] as it may be from the previous dealings between the parties,[63] or by receipts or other evidences of payment made by one and received by the other,[64] or by a contract between them.[65] Where an arrangement has been made that money paid shall be appropriated to the discharge of specified debts, the court may enforce the agreement.[66]

[§ 108] 3. Preference to Debtor or Creditor. Under the rules of the civil law, the application must be made to that debt which the debtor at the time has the most interest to discharge, irrespective of its effects on the creditor,[67] and this rule has been adopted in a few of the jurisdictions in this country.[68] On the other hand, while there are some authorities holding that, under common-law rules, the creditor should be preferred,[69] the more generally accepted rule is that the application will be made in such a manner, in view of all of the circumstances of the case, as is most in accord with justice and equity and will best protect and maintain the rights of both debtor and creditor,[70] even though in order to make a just settlement a departure is made from [a] An obligation as surety is not necessarily less onerous than one as principal, and a payment is not necessarily to be imputed to the latter rather than the former. Whether a debt be more or less onerous depends on the debtor's interest in discharging it. Denis v. Ramouin, 1 Rob. (La.) 318.

Kirkwood, 25 Miss. 95; Baine v. Williams, 18 Miss. 113), (2) it has been applied only where the controversy is between principal debts of unequal dignity as bond or simple contract, or where they are unequally onerous as mortgage and simple contract or where one bears interest or a higher rate of interest and the other bears none or a less rate of interest (Miller v. Leflore, 32 Miss. 634). (3) The rule has not been applied as between claims for principal and interest. Miller v. Leflore, supra. (4) Nor has the rule any application where there is an express agreement between the parties, or a course of business from which an agreement would be implied that another rule shall control. Gwin v. McLean, 62 Miss. 121. (5) Nor will the rule be allowed unjustly to enrich the debtor at the creditor's expense. Clark v. Clark, 58 Miss. 68. (6) Where a married woman borrowed money to pay for land, on which she gave a mortgage to secure the lender and the money so lent was charged on general account, and unappropriated payments were made sufficient to repay the money expended for the land, a court of equity will apply the payments to other items of the account, so as to preserve the lien, a married woman because of her coverture not being liable for the loan to her, and the creditor's remedy therefore being confined to his lien on the land. the mode of appropriation usually followed by the court.[71] This rule applies to involuntary, as well as to voluntary, payments.[72]

[§ 109] 4. Debts to Which Application Will Be Made—a. In General. Where only one debt is shown to exist, of course the law will apply the payment to that debt.[73] A payment will not be applied to a debt owing by the debtor to a third person,[74] nor to debts contracted after the payment,[75] nor to an indebtedness to be incurred in the future,[76] nor to unenforceable demands.[77] It is generally held that the court will apply a payment to interest instead of to principal;[78] to an interest-bearing debt in preference to one bearing no interest;[79] to the debt bearing the highest rate of interest;[80] to the debt bearing compound interest;[81] to the payment of legal interest instead of that which is usurious;[82] to a debt that has matured rather than one not yet due;[83] to the payment of legal items in an account rather than those which are illegal;[84] to an unsecured debt in preference to one for which the creditor is secured;[85] to a debt for which the security is most precarious where the creditor holds more than one security;[86] and, for the purpose of protecting the rights of the creditor, to the earlier items of an account in preference to later ones.[87]

debt first becoming due.[92] Where one debt is due and another is not due, application is made to the past-due indebtedness, in the absence of agreement of the parties to the contrary.[93] But an excess in the payment over the amount of the debt that is due will be applied to the debt not due, leaving the balance of the latter debt still unpaid.[94] The rule does not apply where the parties have agreed to a different application,[95] or where such an agreement is implied from the facts,[96] or where a different application is required on equitable grounds,[97] as where the debts are unequally secured,[98] or the rights of third persons are involved.[99] The fact, however, that a debt subsequently accruing cannot be enforced against exempt property does not prevent the application of a payment to an earlier debt not subject to the exemption statute.[1] If only a portion of the payment is exhausted by application to debts entitled to a preference on equitable grounds, the balance of the money available is applied to the oldest debt in accordance with the general rule.[2]

[§ 111] (2) Items of Current Account.[3] Subject to some limitations[4] the general rule is that, in the case of a running account, where there are various items of debt on one side and various items of credit on the other occurring at different times, and no special appropriation of payments has been made by either party, the successive payments are to be applied in discharge of the items of debit antecedently due, in the order of time in which they stand in the account. In other words, each item of payment is applied in extinguishment of the earliest items of debt until the payment is exhausted.[5] But application will not be made to items, the validity of which is in dispute.[6] The rule applying a payment to the oldest items may be confirmed in a particular case by evidence of the intention of the parties,[7] but the rule holds, even though the parties are ignorant of it.[8] If the intention of the parties appears otherwise, however, as where there is an express understanding between the parties to that effect,[9] or where there is a course of dealings between the parties indicating what their intention was,[10] the court will apply the payment in accordance with that intention. Nor does the rule apply where a different application of the payment has been made by the creditor, acting within his rights,[11] or where a different application is required on equitable grounds,[12] or where the debts and the payments were made, to the charges in the order they accrued; the earliest credits to pay the earliest charges. This is done because it is most just and equitable between the parties, and also because when no different intention has been expressed, such is presumed to be the intention of both parties, as being in accordance with the ordinary and usual course of dealing." "Among the cases where courts have been called upon to make the application, is that of open current accounts, consisting of different items of debt and credit blended in one account. Where the dealings of parties are kept in this way, the different items are not considered as distinct and several debts, but as all constituting but one entire account, the balance of which is the debt between the parties. The rule of application in such cases has, perhaps, been more uniform and invariable than in almost any other case, and that is (where there is nothing to show a different intention by the parties) that the payments shall be applied in the order of time they

[a] Unsecured debt.—Where a mortgage given by a principal, to his factors, to secure an existing debt, provides that it may be extended to future advances, and should remain as a continuing security up to a stipulated sum, and a course of dealing followed, wherein advancements were made by the factors to an amount exceeding the stipulated sum secured by the mortgage, and consignments of goods were sent to them, the proceeds of which were credited to the principal in a general account, in the absence of appropriation by the parties, the credits are to be applied first to the part of the debt not secured grow out of a contract[13] or result from separate transactions[14] having no reference whatever to an account current. It is immaterial that the debtor's property is exempt as against all the other items except the first,[15] or that one of the items consists of a note outlawed by the statute of limitations provided the note is given in the course of the mutual dealings and constitutes a part of the account.[16] If, however, the payment is derived from a particular source or fund and a part of the account is properly payable out of such particular fund and a part is not payable out of such fund, the payment will be applied to items payable out of the particular fund whether such items are the oldest in the account or not.[17] Where part of the items are illegal, a payment will be applied to the earliest legal items.[18] Where a debtor is indebted on two accounts and a payment is made in excess of the amount of the account to which it is applied, the balance will be applied on the other account.[19]

[§ 112] c. Secured and Unsecured Debts[20]—(1) In General. In those states where the civil-law rule has been adopted,[21] the court will apply a payment to a secured rather than an unsecured debt,[22] and to the oldest of the secured debts when there are several.[23] But the civil-law rule, even in these states, will not be applied to the prejudice of certain classes of creditors whose interests other statutory provisions are designed to protect.[24] In other jurisdictions, following the common-law, rather than the civil-law, rule, the payment will be appropriated to the unsecured indebtedness.[25] So where neither the debtor nor the creditor directs the application, the law will apply a payment on the debt which is least secured or for which the security is most precarious.[26] The rule is not applicable, however,

24. Southern Constr. Co. v. Halliburton, 149 Tenn. 319, 337, 258 SW 409.

"While the civil-law rule referred to has been approved in this State in the cases mentioned and in other cases, in all of them there were other circumstances which were likewise considered by the court in applying payments to secured debts. The doctrine grew up in the days when all sureties were personal sureties, when the surety was a pronounced favorite of a court of equity. We think the act of 1917 inclined the favor of the law in a different direction. The laborer and the materialman are objects of special protection in matters such as the one before us. Such a policy of our law is plain in the statute. We think it would be extending the old doctrine to an extent never contemplated by any chancellor, if we applied it as invoked here. Neither the general contractor nor its surety, paid to assume the obligations and responsibilities of their contract, are entitled to make such demand." Southern Constr. Co. v. Halliburton, supra.

where a contrary intention of the parties is proved;[27] or where there is an agreement between the parties, implied from their dealings with each other, that payments should be applied on particular items;[28] or where the payments made are not general payments;[29] or where a note has been taken by the creditor for an indebtedness, part of which was secured and part unsecured, and payments subsequently made were indorsed on the notes;[30] or where both the debts have been cast into one stated account and a payment is made toward the satisfaction of the whole debt;[31] or where a portion of the indebtedness is secured by a lien on the debtor's homestead;[32] or where the payment is derived from the proceeds of a particular security.[33]

[§ 113] (2) Items of Account. Whether a payment on a running account will be appropriated to the earliest items where part are secured and part unsecured is not well settled; a majority of the cases hold that it will be applied to the earliest items,[34] but in following this rule, if part of the payment is applied to a note given for secured and unsecured indebtedness, the part so applied shall be apportioned pro rata on such secured and unsecured indebtedness.[35] Repayment of defalcations is held not to be a running account and not subject to the rule applying payments to the oldest items. In such case application is made to the most precarious debt.[36] Some authorities hold that the application will be to the unsecured, rather than to the oldest, items.[37] The court, however, will apply the payment as the parties intended, if there is clear evidence of the intention in the case.[38]

[§ 114] d. Illegal or Unenforceable Demands.[39] Where there are several demands or items, some of which are legal and others illegal, a payment will be applied by the court to the legal charges rather than to unlawful claims.[40] And where payments have been made and applied to unenforceable demands under a mistake of fact, such payments may be reapplied to other enforceable demands in an action brought to recover the balance due.[41] Where the payment is made, however, under circumstances indicating the intention of the debtor to apply the payment to an illegal or unenforceable demand, an effective application to such demand is held to have been made.[42] As between admitted and disputed debts, a payment by the debtor will be presumed to have been made upon the admitted debt.[43]

[§ 115] e. Joint Debts and Debts Due Different Persons.[44] Where a debtor is solely liable on one debt and jointly liable on another, a payment by him should be applied to the former,[45] and especially so where such application is intended and agreed to by the parties.[46] So where, after the death of the debtor, his representative continues the business, and becomes further indebted on account, payments thereon will be applied to the earliest items for which the debtor's estate only is chargeable.[47]

[§ 116] f. Payment from Particular Source or Fund.[48] When the money is derived from a particular source or fund, the court will apply it to the relief thereof, in the absence of a contrary agreement between the parties.[49] For instance, a payment made from the proceeds of mortgaged property must be applied in payment of the mortgage debt,[50] except where to do so would be inequitable.[51] And so it is held that, where a mortgagor without knowledge of prior foreclosure makes a payment, the court will apply it for the purpose of redemption.[52] The rule does not apply where the intention of the parties in making and accepting payment is to apply it to a debt unconnected with the particular source or fund,[53] or where the mortgage by its terms provides that the mortgagee shall be entitled to apply the proceeds of sales of mortgaged property to other unsecured debts,[54] or where payment is made with proceeds from the voluntary sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor as distinguished from the proceeds of a foreclosure sale,[55] or where payment is made with proceeds from the voluntary sale of mortgaged chattels by one who afterward became the assignee of the chattel mortgage.[56]

[§ 117] g. Distribution between All of Debts.[57] In the absence of circumstances requiring a different application, the court will oftentimes appropriate a payment ratably toward the payment of all the debts of the debtor owing to the creditor,[58] as where the evidence discloses such to have been the intention of the parties,[59] or where the entire indebtedness was treated by both parties as one lump sum,[60] or where the fund available for payment had been obtained through a judgment in an action brought on all the debts.[61]

[§ 118] h. Contingent Liabilities.[62] As between certain debts and contingent liabilities the law applies payments to the former rather than to the latter.[63] For instance, where one indebted on his own account and also as surety for another makes a payment without specifying to which debt it shall be applied, the law will apply it to his own debt.[64] So a payment will be applied to the contract originally entered into by the debtor rather than to one with a third person which he had assumed.[65]

[§ 119] i. Principal and Interest[66]—(1) In General. The general rule under both the civil and common law[67] is that, in the absence of evidence of the parties' intention to make a different application,[68] a payment made on an indebtedness consisting of principal and interest, not applied by either the debtor or creditor, will be applied first to the interest due and then to the principal.[69] Application will be made, however, to the principal rather than to interest where the parties have so agreed,[70] and where such intention is established by clear and conclusive evidence,[71] such an agreement not operating, per se, as a waiver of the right to demand payment of the interest later.[72] The rule requiring application of payments to interest first applies where the payment is made by note as well as by money,[73] where a debt is one on which interest is given as damages as well as where it expressly draws interest,[74] and to transactions where an agreement for an usurious rate of interest has been repudiated, the application being restricted, however, to the amount of interest due computed at the legal rate.[75] The rule is not applicable in the case of interest on an overdrawn account which, according to the practise of bankers, has been converted from time to time into principal.[76]

[§ 120] (2) Surplus after Payment of Interest Due. If the payment is in excess of the interest due at the time, the balance is imputed to the principal,[77] whether it is a general payment[78] or a payment for interest only.[79] But where a payment of interest at an agreed rate in excess of the legal rate has been voluntarily made, the excess payment cannot be applied to the principal,[80] and where there was no proof of a usurious agreement, nor anything to show that usurious interest was given or accepted in consideration of an extension of the time of payment of the loan, interest in excess of the legal rate, voluntarily paid by the borrower, could not be credited on the principal.[81]

[§ 121] (3) Advance Payments. If neither principal nor interest is due, some cases hold that the payment must be applied to the principal,[82] but the weight of authority holds that it should be applied to the extinguishment of principal and such proportion of interest as has accrued on the principal so extinguished,[83] while still other authorities hold that the advance payment must be applied first to the extinguishment of interest up to the time when payment is made and then to the principal pro tanto.[84] Where a contract provides for advance payments and their application to principal and inter-
